Mrs. Frances Levenson, acting director of the committee, said on Sept. 4, while dedicated a luncheon meeting of the student Bar Association of Howard University last Wednesday, Lionel G. Ranger, president of the student groups presided.

The whole speech is a frank plea for all-colored housing, understandable if it had been made 10 years ago, but incredible today," Mrs. Levenson said.

Ione leaves greatest damage on Carolina Coast in 33 years

WILMINGTON, N.C. — Ione moved into the Northeast early Tuesday morning, leaving coastal North Carolina in a state of water - logged shock after her worst buffeting from the elements in 33 years.

Downed powerlines and washed out highways cut communications between the hard - hit towns of Morehead City, Little Washington, New Bern, Kinston, Beaufort and Swansboro.

Early Saturday and throughout Sunday preparations went on to safeguard the homes, farms and businesses already hard hit by two hurricanes, Connie and Diane, earlier this year. Military, naval, and Marine installations early undertook the removal of planes from the area.

By 7:30 Monday, gales of 92 miles per hour began their assault on Wilmington, smashing out windows in thousands of homes, removing rooftops and whipping up high tides and the 6½ inches of rains which fell Sunday and Monday.

Gales abated early Monday to 40 miles per hour, and Wilmington schools opened on schedule Tuesday although classes had to be held on upper floors in some instances because of the flooding of basements and lower floors.

* * *

MOVING NORTHWARD, Ione again swung eastward, skirting the Hampton Roads area where considerably less damage was done to shipping or property, although low-lying streets were flooded in both Norfolk and Portsmouth.

The towns of Hampton and Newport News, on the Peninsula side of Hampton Roads, took extensive precautions which fortunately turned out to be not required.

Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina made a trip Monday into the Morehead City-Swansboro-New Bern area and described the damage as greater than that from earlier storms.

Immediately after his arrival back in Raleigh the Governor said he would contact Washington, D.C., in an effort to secure additional federal disaster aid to alleviate the plight of the hard-hit residents of the coastal as well as inland towns.

Early reports on the damage in the individual towns which was estimated as running into millions of dollars follows:

Richmond

Failing to live up to her advance billing as the "worst" storm of the season, Hurricane Ione was a mere gale as she whirled through Virginia Monday night packing winds of only 42 miles an hour.

Richmonders spent most of the day battening down for the expected big blow that never materialized. The city suffered little damage beyond flooded streets resulting from the torrential rains.

* * *

INTERMITTENT DOWNPOURS drenched the city throughout the night, but at 1:30 a.m. only 3.7 inches of rain had fallen, as compared with a record-breaking 8.79 inches when Hurricane Connie visited the city last month.

Public and Parochial schools in Richmond and nearby counties closed at midday Monday.

Three Richmond streets were closed due to flooding conditions late Monday night, but were opened to traffic again Tuesday, after the water subsided. No casualties were reported during the storm.

Newport News alerted

NEWPORT NEWS, Va.—This major shipping and shipbuilding town adjacent to Hampton Roads was placed on an alert early Sunday evening and remained so for more than 24 hours.

Schools were not opened Monday, ferry service between Newport News and Norfolk and mail deliveries were suspended.

However, the city and most of the Peninsula area escaped the brunt of the hurricane.

No injuries and small damage were reported from the 45-mile-per-hour wind gusts, 2.3 inches of rainfall and tides of 3½ feet.

Capital spared

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Schoolchildren and government workers were released around noon Monday as a precautionary measure. Store windows were taped and emptied in many instances.

Potomac power and telephone linesmen mobilized on standby basis. Eye of storm early Monday reported expected to hit city shortly after midnight, passed approximately 150 miles to the eastward around 4-5 a.m.

Heavy rains and winds considerably less than hurricane force, were all to reach Washington.

Wilmington flooded

WILMINGTON, N.C. — The damage here was considerable, less than that of Connie and Diane. About 1,800 houses flooded or suffered wind damage.

About 200 persons fled and sheltered. Phone circuits still tied up Tuesday noon as linesmen fought to restore twisted, torn down and disrupting communications in the entire eastern North Carolina area.

Elizabeth City spared

ELIZABETH CITY, N.C. — Heavy rains but little damage. Tides, winds above normal, but little cause for alarm.

Morehead City damaged

MOREHEAD CITY — Morehead City, a coastal resort city with a resident population of 1,500 of whom slightly more than 14 percent are colored, was hit by the full force of Hurricane Ione which left in its wake the "greatest destruction in 33 years."

Smashed by gales of an estimated velocity of 107 miles per hour, and flooded by rising tides before the arrival of the wind, Morehead City was left virtually isolated and full damage could not be obtained because of damaged roads and downed wires.

Reports meager

WASHINGTON, N.C. — Only meager reports trickled out of Eastern North Carolina Monday and early Tuesday as the area fought to right itself after a buffeting from Ione, the worst hurricane of 1955.

Red Cross headquarters reported that in Washington, a town of nearly 10,000 persons of whom nearly half are colored, was about one-third flooded with several rectenan. Apply 1311 Monroe Street.

The two men were charged with whipping Robert Lee Colbert on the street August 20. Steele said that he saw Daniel's six-year-old son on the street crying. The child said that Colbert struck him.

Steele said that Colbert struck him and ran when he attempted to question him about the incident. Young Colbert denied the accusations, but stated that the Daniels' boy squirted water on him.
