WORDS To Live By

by REV. R. T. NEWBOLD
Pastor, Grace Presbyterian Church

The most important person in a child's world are his parents. His relationship with them influence his future adjustments or maladjustments.

Because of this fact, those who seek to understand and help disorganized adults always wish information concerning their childhood relationship with parents.

The role of parents, therefore, is the most important one in our social structure. It should not be approached casually or indifferently because of the following additional reasons:

Parents influence the emotional health of their children.

MOTHERS AND fathers who are hostile to each other, or who are completely frustrated, need to recognize that such conditions often become contagious, and leave their mark upon the children.

This mark is often not recognized until years later. Just as parents show interest in their children's physical health, so should they be concerned about their emotional health.

Moreover, parents often contribute to their children's becoming poor marriage risks.

The relationship between a mother and son sometimes becomes such that the son suffers from a "mother complex." Thus, in seeking a life's mate he seeks another mother and not a wife.

THE RELATIONSHIP between a father and daughter sometimes results in the daughter's seeking a partner who is another father instead of a husband.

It is inevitable that the child's first love will be his parents. It is tragic, however, when mothers and fathers fail to help their children refrain from permanently fixing their pattern of love accordingly.

Another factor which must be considered is that much of the dependence and insecurity of adults can be traced to the parent-child relationship.

Obviously during his early years a child depends upon his father and mother. Some fathers and mothers enjoy this very much until they never help the child to "stand on his own two feet."

THE CHILDREN of such parents always depend upon mother and father. They later become adults who cannot make decisions as the average adult.

A great number of parents fail to give their children the feeling of security. They shower them with gifts; but deprive them of love.

They give them an allowance; but do not give them attention. They do not neglect their physical needs but they forget about their emotional needs.

Children who come from such homes frequently become adults who are suspicious, extremely jealous, attention - seeking, mixed up" people.

They suffer from insecurity.

FINALLY, PARENTS mould the moral attitudes of children. Some mothers and fathers teach their children to lie by what they instruct them to say when the collector arrives.

They encourage them to accept low moral standards as they reveal how they, as parents, lack integrity and a spirit of "fair-play."

How can we have much hope for moral men and women tomorrow when many of the children of today have no choice but to be brought up in an immoral home environment?

Indeed, the most important persons in a child's life are his parents. During the child's early age, parents should always remember that they are "standins" for God.

Rites held for Jacob O. Smith

More than 150 persons filed past the bier of Jacob O. Smith, 69, a retired employee of the Consolidated Gas and Electric Company Tuesday, before funeral services at his home 3412 Gwynns Falls Pkwy.

A native Baltimorean and an active member of the NAACP and Douglas Memorial Community Church, Mr. Smith died at his home in Friday.

Services were conducted by the Rev. Marion C. Bascomb. He was assisted by the Rev. Paul Harris of Brown's Memorial Church; the Rev. William Payne of Wayside Baptist Church; and the Rev. John Lindsey.

* * *

MR. SMITH, a lifetime member of Doulas, joined the church when it was known as the Old Rainbow Street Church.

His favorite hymn, "Cloudy Day" was sung by Mrs. Janie Walker, Mrs. Daisy Shird and Mrs. Eloise Thomas sang, "Just a Closer Walk With Thee."

Mr. Smith, who retired from his job after serving 23 years, devoted part of his time to writing fictional stories.
