City flubs snag Harlem Park project

A snag developed this week in the Harlem Park urban renewal project as several city agencies squabbled over which one has the right to designate an area for such redevelopment and which has the authority to seek federal funds to aid such a project.

The first indication that a rhubarb was developing was seen on Tuesday during a meeting of the Redevelopment Commission.

It was this agency which designated the area surrounding Harlem Park as the first such section in the city to undergo urban renewal.

However, the city solicitor's office notified the commission that it had no authority to go into any district which has not been designated a redevelopment area by the City Council.

With this the commission decided not to ask for Federal aid for the project.

• • •

THE AREA in question lies between Lafayette Avenue and Mulberry St. and Fremont Ave. and Monroe St. Already community committees have been appointed and organized to get the work started.

Urban renewal does not tear down and rebuild as redevelopment does. Instead it tries to rehabilitate.

The Harlem Park area which also includes Lafayette Square, has many homes within it which have been deteriorating and city planners say they would become slums unless urban renewal is effected.

In regard to the request for Federal funds for the area, the Director of Public Works told the City Planning Commission on Wednesday that a city agency other than the Redevelopment Commission should make the application for government help.

• • •

MEANWHILE, DANIEL H. SHEAR, planning analyst for the Commission, declared that the revised plan for the controversial Broadway Redevelopment Area has been sent to the Housing and Home Financing Agency regional office in Washington.

He indicated that the new plans would be approved.

In the meantime, however, a parking lot has been constructed at the corner of Monument and Bond Sts. "Reserved for Johns Hopkins Hospital."

This is the area which was cleared for slums and in which over 900 persons were moved out of their homes, the majority of them colored.

Interest in another's wief was why husband left her

Mrs. Mary Byrd of 1522 N. Caroline St. had her maiden name, White, restored when she divorced William A. Byrd of 1810 N. Monroe St., this week.

Charging desertion, Mrs. Byrd said "He became interested in another man's wife and decided he just did not want to be bothered with me any more. So he packed up and left."

Say man, 22, ate rat poison seeds

WASHINGTON

James Williams, 22, 2700 block Jasper Ave., SE, was taken to Freedmen's Hospital Monday afternoon after being removed from a booth at a restaurant at Seventh and T Sts., NW.

Police said he had consumed a number of rat poison seeds in a booth in the eating place. Williams was later removed to D.C. General Hospital for mental observation.

Woman assaulted waiting for bus

Mrs. Jessie Albert, 1600 block N. Payson St., reported to Northwestern District officers early Sunday, that she had been assaulted and robbed while waiting for a bus at North Ave. and Payson St.

She told police that an unidentified youth choked her and took her watch and a ring valued at $150.

Park spends $300 weekly picking up trash visitors leave

Robert I. Palmer, superintendent of Patapsco State Park, says, "In this park alone, approximately $300 is spent weekly in picking up after the careless habits of visitors who thoughtlessly toss papers, bottles and other trash on the ground.

"If visitors would use one of the 500 trash barrels placed throughout the park, each week the Park could use the $300 to buy approximately six more picnic tables and fire places," said Mr. Palmer.

Trash barrels in all Maryland State Parks and Recreation Areas are being stenciled with "Deposit Trash Here and Keep Maryland Beautiful."
