"We're still looking for him. "We wanted to talk with him but he's skipped out."

While testifying in the case of a 15-year-old blonde girl who claimed that she was raped by four teen-aged boys, that's what Southwestern District police said Sunday about the co-owner of an apartment where the alleged attack occurred.

Arresting officers sent the apartment, in the 200 block Washington Blvd., which they described as "one of the nicest we have seen," had been rented to Anthony Glover and his white companion, William T. Muhrer.

The girl testified that the attack took place last Tuesday after she had walked almost five miles from her English Consul St home to a teen-age hangout on Washington Blvd., called the "Jungle."

* * *

SHE SAID she complained of feeling bad while there and was introduced to two boys who offered to take her to an apartment to give her something to make her feel better.

In the apartment she stated there were from 15 to 20 white youths and at least six attacked her.

The girl said she couldn't identify any of the attackers because the lights were out.

Police charged four boys with rape and they were ordered held without bail Sunday.

'I was looking for my wife...'

"I was looking for my wife. We were separated and I did not know exactly where she lived.

"I was in the hallway when this white boy hit me. The woman held me and the boy got her a hammer."

James Earl Weldon, 31, of 218 Amity St., was testifying in Criminal Court Monday and explaining his presence at 121 Broadway address.

He was charged with breaking and entering two apartments in the building in August.

* * *

MRS. SARAH JOHNSON, who lives in the Broadway address, stated that Weldon kicked in her door, left and returned a second time.

Weldon denied the charge.

Judge E. Paul Mason sentenced him to one year in the Maryland House of Correction on each count, the sentences to run concurrently.

'Wake up Old Baltimore' with 'Happy Days' Hicks

In this article of the "Wake Up, Old Baltimore" series, Moses R. (Happy Days) Hicks, one of the "founders" of the series, writes of some more of his recollections.

He asks:

"Do you remember the most important thing in your happy years? Not the jobs you have had, not your travels, or later day acquaintances, but the most pleasant thing that lulls you to peaceful sleep. It is your childhood, the most impressive part of life.

"I forget many people, their names, addresses, telephone numbers, etc., but every girl and boy of my childhood, is a pleasant memory. I remember where I lived as a boy, with a loving mother and dad, and brothers and sisters.

"DO YOU remember when the Italian colony of Baltimore presented the Columbus statue in Druid Hill Park? When Heaver St. in Northeast Baltimore was Andrews Ave?

"When Eutaw St. was Auchentoroly Terr.? Laurens St. was Patterson Park Ave.? When the Rev. Julius Gray of Psalmist Baptist Church had more power in Northwest Baltimore than the police?

"Do you remember the horse-drawn fire apparatus at Druid Hill Ave. and Eutaw St., with its beautiful three white horses? When the alarm sounded, the firemen slid down the shiny brass pole.

"The horses pranced in place, waiting for their harnesses to be put on. Baltimore's Fire Chief, McAfee, in his one horse red carriage, provided a thrill that no mechanical outfit will ever give. But let's give three cheers for all firemen.

"Do you remember when goats were roaming on the lot, where houses are now, in the 1300 block Etting St.? Do you remember Shipwreck Kelly, who sat atop a flag pole for six days? Do you remember when Polytechnic was at 311 Courtland St.?

* * *

DO YOU remember the good old days? Get on the "Wake Up Old Baltimore" band wagon with "Happy Days" Moses R. Hicks. All you need to do to come aboard, is to send in your recollections of good "Old Baltimore."

'Every dog is entitled to one bite'

"I was on my way to a restaurant. My business came up to me and struck me in my left eye."

This was the testimony of Mrs. Nellie M. Thomas, 2400 block Edmondson Ave., Friday in Northwestern District Court before Magistrate Meredith H. Hoffmaster.

Her soldier-husband, William Thomas, stationed at Ft. Meade, pleaded guilty to striking her, but explained matters this way:

"Sir, it was my fault. I saw her standing in front of a bar with a group of men around her. She was with her sister, but with men standing around . . ." the soldier's voice trailed off.

MR. THOMAS admitted loving his wife. Mrs. Thomas told the magistrate: "I did love him, but after a man hits you . . ."

"Every dog is entitled to one bite," the magistrate told Mrs. Thomas, who said that she expecting a child. He then told the couple to "kiss and make up," suspending a $25 fine for the soldier-husband.

Yes, it's true

By GARFIELD HINTON

What makes a hero? To the ancient Greeks a hero was a warrior, who distinguished himself on the battlefield. For him, no honor was too great.

Webster says: "A hero is a central personage taking an admirable part in any remarkable action or event, hence a person regarded as a model."

History of folklore tells of a little Dutch boy, who put his finger in a dyke and kept water from flooding his native land, until help came.

America has its heroes. Perhaps, nowhere, Hungary notwithstanding, are there more heroes today, than among the colored folk in Mississippi.

Last week when Gus Courts visited the AFRO, he brought some of that Mississippi heroism to Baltimore. Gus Courts wanted to vote. He wanted to vote so badly, he was willing to die, if necessary, for that right.

He wanted a voice in his government, down in Belzoni.

"We can't have a black man with a voice in his government in Belzoni," white supremacist told him.

* * *

FIRST, THEY smiled, patted him on the back and offered the big man, bribes if he would remove his name from the voting list, renounce his NAACP membership and let fall his mantle of leadership.

He steadfastly refused to compromise one Mississippi inch, so they put economic pressure on him. He was a merchant. They refused to sell him stock. Still, he remained steadfast; in despeation, they shot him.

Miraculously, he lived. Gus Courts risked his life for the right to vote. What will you risk, Tuesday?

Is Maryland camp answer to our juvenile problem?

"What are we going to do with our delinquents? How can we handle this overwhelming problem? And how can we make useful citizens of those of our youth who have gone astray?"

These questions were raised recently as a police magistrate, perturbed by the perplexity of this problem, was about to sentence two 16-year-old boys who, police said, had tried to break into a liquor store.

Tuesday, at a meeting of the Frontiers, an organization of business and professional men, the question of the upset jurist were partially answered by a guest speaker from the Green Ridge Boys Camp.

Raymond L. Minella, chief of the training school, gave a bird's eye view of how Maryland seeks to rehabilitate its errant youth.

* * *

"AT GREEN RIDGE Camp," he said, "we have taken youngsters out of the city atmosphere to a forest area that is over 120 miles from Baltimore.

"One authority on juvenile delinquency said that a delinquent is like a hooded cobra waiting to strike. What happens, then, when you collect 800 of them at this time you put them to work, chopping trees and doing other types of work of this nature?

"Our intention is to build these boys into men who can take their place in normal society and functions.

"The camp was begun as an experiment and the first group of boys was taken there in May, 1955.

"In a sense, the boys pay their own way, because they work in forestry. We also pay them by giving them fifty cents a day.

"When the camp first started, there was a minimum of housing facilities. The boys have built a beautiful camp site for themselves. And when I say build, I mean that they made the cement blocks, installed the plumbing, and completed the place even to the storm windows.

"THIS TYPE of rustic living does something for boys. And many of the fellows we turn out go on from that point to real readjustment. Don't misunderstand me. This is not to assume that they all do well once they leave; some have gone out and done murders and others were involved in crimes of other types.

"But we can be proud of the young men who have actually proven the worth of this project by going out and making ood citizens of themselves.

"We can be proud, too, of the help we have gotten from independent citizens. At the moment, I had in mind Howard Murphy of the AFRO. He has really given us some remarkable aid."

MR. MURPHY, who is serving his second term on the State Board of Public Welfare, was one of the members who continued to push for this experimental program until it was finally established last May.

THEY WELCOMED ADLAI — The above group was among the estimated 500 persons who braved Tuesday morning's drizzle to welcome Democractic Presidential Candidate Adlai Stevenson upon his arrival at Friendship International Airport Tuesday. In the group are 1-to-r, Charles C. Dorsey, Truly Hatchett, Robert Watts (partially hidden, Mrs. Margaret Harmon, Miss Angela Bambace, Warren Bucker and Creston (Doc) Woingust).

Rain fails to dampen spirits of Stevenson's backers

By JOSEPH SHEPHARD

Dampened in everything but enthusiasm, a hardy segment of Baltimore's Democratic population turned out Tuesday in a rain-soaked tribute to its presidential candidate, Adlai Stevenson.

The former Illinois Governor who is engaging in his second battle with President Dwight D. Eisenhower for the "most difficult job in the world" arrived at Friendship Airport nearly an hour behind schedule.

An off-again-on-again drizzle raised a harvest of umbrellas among the 500-odd party faithful who converged upon the airport shortly after 10 a.m. to await arrival of the huge four-motored Stevenson campaign special.

Many of the umbrellas carried by female members of the contingent were sky-blue affairs, lettered in black with the names of Stevenson and Kefauver.

AMONG THE EARLY arrival were Truly B. Hatchett, member of the Maryland State House of Delegates; Robert B. Watts, attorney; Joseph Neale, labor union official; Lloyal Randolph, Democratic leader; Mrs. Margaret Harmon and Mrs. Viola Pope.

During the hour before arrival of the Stevenson plane, party officials scurried about the airport making last-minute sealing arrangements for the mile-long cavalcade which was to carry the group to the City Hall Plaza for Mr. Stevenson's speech.

On hand nearly as early as the Stevenson supporters were three carloads of the opposition, who were observed halted in the rain about a mile from the airport affixing signs reading "GOP Truth Squad" to their vehicles.

While Mr. Stevenson and his party were still shaking hands and posing for photographers, a smaller but more colorful red, white and blue two-engined transport set down on the runway and taxied to a spot several hundred feet from the Stevenson plane but still within hearing distance of the crowd's "boo's."

On its side, the full height of the fuselage were the words: "GOP Truth Squad."

LAST-MINUTE plans for a stop of the cavalcade at Cherry Hill, whose estimated, 3,500 votes are expected to play a major part in the outcome of the Baltimore City balloting were abandoned after a detour through that area showed only a handful of interested spectators.

Democratic leaders said later that this was no indication of lack of interest in the Democratic candidates, but was due to the rain and the lack of advance notice.

Only scattered interest was shown in the parade route until with sirens screaming, horns blaring and a sound truck blasting it reached the crowded Lexington Street shopping district in the middle of the lunch hour.

The reaction of the crowds along the sidewalk was varied. By this time the top had been lowered on the convertible in which Mr. Stevenson was riding, and he waved smilingly, but wetly, from his perch on the back seat.

Some spectators waved back with cheers for "Adlai and Estes." Some yelled defiantly, "We like Ike." Some were apathetic. Some seemed annoyed that the cavalcade prevented their crossing streets to get about their lunchtime business.

Still others just flinched, and put fingers in their ears when airhorns blasted on the two buses which were carrying reporters and campaign staff workers.

A SEA OF UMBRELLAS, liberally spiked with signs proclaiming the liking of their bearers for "Adlai and Estes" greeted the procession when it reached City Hall Plaza.

So did a wave of cheers from the estimated 3,500 "real good Democrats," as one member of the crowd termed them, who had foregone lunch or the comfort of shelter to wait for more than an hour in alternating drizzle and downpour.

A FIGHTING Stevenson, far removed from the candidate who had been described as "unable to win a crowd," was at his barbed best.

Bareheaded, he stood on a platform which police barred other spectators for fear that it would collapse and attacked "Republican cynicism and hypocrisy."

Following his introduction by Baltimore's Mayor D'Alesandro he urged the support of Democratic Congressional candidates.

A voice from the crowd yelled "How about Mahoney?" And Mr. Stevenson replied "I'll talk about Mahoney in due time."

A few minutes later he assailed Republican tactics in the 1950 campaign, terming it "one of the most shameless campaigns of distortion ever to disgrace an American election.

Speaking of the Republican Senatorial candidate, Sen. John Marshall Butler, he declared:

"A man who would win by such tactics deserves to be beaten. When he recalls the campaign of 1950, Senator Butler now tries to make us believe that he was just a fool, in order that we do not think him a knave.

"But neither a knave nor a fool is a fit representative for Maryland in the United States Senate."

Mr. Stevenson concluded his speech with a plea for "that fighting candidate, George Mahoney," just as the heaviest downpour of the day started.

Whom Do You Like Adlai Or Ike

Here's the complete list of winners in the $500 Political Contest which closed October 22, 1956.

The $500 Political contest is over. Winner of the $200 first prize is Dora L. Houston, of Jamaica, N.Y., whose winning letter is printed at right of this page.

The $5 winners are listed below. Checks to the winners are already in the mail.

Here are some more excerpts from a few of the many hundreds of entries received in the contest.

THEY'RE FOR ADLAI

New Bern, N.C.—Stevenson is liberal, progressive, courageous and a man of action. For actions, see his record as Governor of Illinois; for courage, note his unequivocal endorsement of the desegregation decision when visiting in the South.

ERNEST MURRAY

* * *

State Park, S.C.—He will not stand for mob violence. He will aid in upholding the laws and decision of the Supreme Court more efficiently than ever before.

Yanceyville, N.C.—He is a statesman in the Winston Churchill class. By virtue of his preparation and experience, he possesses the knowledge ,vision, intellectual and physical qualities to lead this country, and the entire world, toward solutions of the complex problems confronting mid 20th Century man.

E. H. STANBACK

* * *

Trenton, N.J.—His plan for lowering taxes, banning H-bomb tests, upholding the Supreme Court's ruling for integration, and better care for the aged, is what this country needs above all.

MRS. REMEL ROBINSON

* * *

Rice, Va.—The Democrats are broadminded enough to induce change. "Where there is no vision, the nation perisheth."

LEROY C. ALLEN

* * *

Detroit, Mich.—I'm for Stevenson because his plans and program believe in sharing prosperity with all classes. He favors civil rights. When one man has all the controlling power, as our present President has, one begins to think of dictatorship.

MARTHA H. BROWN

* * *

THEY'RE FOR IKE

Salisbury, N.C. — We know that the Democrats are in the majority in the South, and we know what is happening there —why vote for more of it?

* * *

Frogmore, S.C.—He seems to realize that the world wants peace. America has a chance to do a great deal in helping other nations to make peace a major concern during the next four years.

MRS. ARABELLE W. LEWIS

Wheeling, W. Va.—Of all the American generals since Washington, Eisenhower has the great qualifications for civil authority. He has worked in harmony with national leaders and in all his work, he shows great ability as a planner and organizer.

MISS ARERENA CATLIN

* * *

Atlantic City, N.J. — Eisenhower will be the next President because he continues to have the respect and trust of the American people as well as members of his own party.

MADELINE H. ROWLEY

* * *

Fayetteville, N.C. — Under Ike we have had prosperity without war, the Supreme Court school decision with a Democratic Congress, and a chance of getting a Republican Congress to insure integration becoming an actuality.

DARIUS JOHNSON, JR.

* * *

Farmville, Va.—He is a man with a mind of his own, not swayed by political influences. He proved this when he vetoed the farm bill during an election year.

EDWARD B. ALLEN

$200 Letter

"For the first time since 1936, I find myself in a position to vote in a Presidential election.

And, for the first time, I shall exercise this almost sacred privilege without an iota of confidence in either candidate's concern that the colored people should not be discriminated against because of race, color and previous condition of servitude.

Neither party at Chicago or San Francisco gave he could hope for more in the future than he has had in the past.

* * *

HOW I WISH I could be wrong—that Mr. Nixon, in order to create a little liking for him as a person and to win thousands of votes for the ticket, was assigned the, perhaps distasteful, task of speaking out for the equal rights of the neglected millions of colored people in this country.

That keeps us in the familiar role of being sugared up and used as a catspaw in emergencies.

The plight of the colored American seems to reach neither Mr. Eisenower's sense of justice, nor his compassion for abused humanity.

* * *

IT IS INCREDIBLE that the head of any nation could look in silence upon the lynching of the Till boy, the terrorizing of Authurine Lucy, the intimidation and indignities suffered by those, who elected not to ride buses under humiliating conditions, and the refusal of certain localities to integrate their schools after it was so decreed by the United States Supreme Court.

Every colored person in the country should demand that the violators of this ruling be fined and jailed.

There is no question but that states have certain rights, but no state has any right that nullifies a mandate from the highest tribunal of the land.

* * *

SINCE MR. EISENHOWER seems to ignore these violations of law and human dignity, I cannot vote for him.

I cannot find it in my heart to say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him."

I rather feel that, should I trust him, he might slay me.

And I am the entire colored citizenry.
