NO EXCESS BAGGAGE—Every piece of equipment shown here has a specific use in skin diving, according to Malcolm Jones, 19, 3124 Belmont Ave. In his hands the diver holds a spear gun for shooting fish. Near him are the air tanks which enable him to remain under water for over an hour. Also shown are his face mask, depth indicator, and rubber suit used for winter diving.

'Very glad,' says pool girl

"I haven't used the pools this year because when I get home at night from work it is too late.

"But I am very glad that they are open and everyone can use them.

These were the words this week of Miss Mamie Livingstone, 1027 N. Washington St., the young lady whose pen played an important role in the ending of segregation at the swimming pools operated by the City of Baltimore.

Back in 1953 there was only one pool for colored swimmers and six for the white. Miss Livingstone did not seem fair to 15-year-old Mamie, then a high school pupil.

She wrote a letter to the AFRO and called attention to this inequality. Her letter prompted the NAACP to open a legal attack on the segregated pools.

Mamie and her sister, Marie, were listed as two of the original complainants. The sisters in a long court fight the victory was won.

LATE last year when the decision was made to open the pools, Miss Livingstone, 21, planned to go swimming.

"But I won't go back to Johns Hopkins Hospital and I just didn't have the time," she said this week with regret in her voice.

Her sister, Marie, now 17-year-old, has also been unable to visit the pools.

"Even though we haven't been, we still think it's a fine thing just to know that you can go," added Miss Marie Livingston, the young lady whose pen started the whole thing.

'Not states' rights, but states' wrongs'

NEW YORK—Criticism of the school desegregation decision as an invasion of states' rights is the "least relevant, most dangerous and most fraudulent attack" of the three major arguments against it, according to Louis H. Pollak, professor of law at Yale University.

Speaking at the National Bar Association convention here last week, Pollak said that the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in schools had come late, and proposed to "correct our mistakes under
