Youths who killed teacher 'not bad'
By RUFUS WELLS
KENBRIDGE, Va. — "I don't know what got into them... they're not bad boys. God knows I've done all I could..."
Mrs. Hattie Bagley, who reared Samuel Thomas, one of two teen-agers sentenced to life imprisonment Tuesday for slaying their former school teacher with a shoe, was trying to explain the youth's violent behavior.
Seated in the living room of their one-story farmhouse beneath a picture of Christ, the white-haired grandmother said:
"I don't know why they did it. Mrs. Overby was always so good to them. She called them her boys,' and, was always helping them out.
"THE NIGHT IT happened I was—getting—ready—to—go to church and I tried to get Samuel to go with me. He said he didn't reckon he'd go. But he came to church later and brought me home. I always told him that if he got into any bad trouble I wouldn't have anything to do with it.
"And I meant it, I haven't been to see them since they were arrested and I don't plan to attend the trial."
Mrs. Bagley wiped her hands on the green print apron she wore over her gray cotton dress. She had been fixing her hair when the AFRO visited.
In her dining room the table was set. Mrs. Bagley explained that her pastor, the Rev. Mr. Hurt of Gilfield Baptist Church, Crew, Va., was coming for dinner.

* * *

SHE HESITATED a moment, then returned to the subject that had preyed on her mind since a police car pulled up to the house about 2 a.m. Aug. 30 to bring her the bad news.
"Mrs. Overby has been kidnapped and her car is gone. We think your boy did it," the officer had said.
Neither Mrs. Bagley nor the officer knew at the moment that Mrs. Overby was dead, her body in the Camp Pickett reservoir.
Mrs. Bagley spoke again:
"I've been thinking and thinking ever since this happened. I'm 70 some years old and I've never had anything like this to happen. It gets right close to me.
"I've raised nine children and all of them turned out good. I gave them what schooling I could and tried to show them the right way.
"Just the other day I received a letter from Samuel. He said he was sorry for what he had done and for me not to worry. That he had prayed and had been forgiven and that everything was all right.
"But I can't help worrying. I'll be glad when the trial is over. They've got to pay for what they have done. I keep praying it won't be too bad."
Asked if she had any idea why the boys had killed their teacher who had so often befriended them, she said:
"I don't know. Maybe A lady told me they had been drinking that night. They had been to hear a quartet, some gospel singers — they loved to hear gospel singers.
"BUT I THINK the biggest problem was this girl Samuel had been going with. They broke up and he started to acting crazy."
Mrs. Bagley spoke highly of Samuel, whom she had reared, and his companion, Russell, but her sentiments were not shared by other Kenbridge residents.
The youth's teachers said they were "problem boys" that they were difficult to manage and were poor students. A businessman said the boys spent long hours "roaming" the streets.
COURT RECORDS show that Samuel was accused to forging a check and that restitution was made before the matter came to trial.
At any rate, the Thomas boys are walkbouts in Kenbridge and vicinity and the crime they confessed will go down as one of the most brutal in the town's history.
As they serve their life sentence, citizens still ponder the $64,000 question: "Why did they do it?"
But the answer is locked up with the convicted killers in the state penitentiary at Richmond.

—Boys get life
Jefferson and Roscoe Garden asked for leniency due to the defendants' ages and their low I.Q.
However, the psychiatrist testified that the boys had carefully wiped their fingerprints from the bloodstained car in an effort to avoid detection.
