Mayor, City Council approve two more school sites

proved school condemnation Ordinances 1313 and 1497 | ment of Education to take over
Mayor D'Alesandro has ap- | which will allow the Depart- | properties in the Calhoun and Lexington Sts. area and the Winchester St.-Whitmore Ave. sector for school building purposes.

The two ordinances were passed by the City Council two weeks ago without dissenting votes. Previously, the Council's Judiciary Committee had held a public hearing on the proposed school sites, and heard protests from affected property owners.

Ordinance 1313 covers all properties within the area bounded by Saratoga St. on the north; Calhoun St. to the east; Lexington St. on the south, and Stricker St. to the west.

Ordinance 1497 covers those properties within the sector bounded by Winchester St. on the north; Whitmore Ave. to the east; Lafayette Ave. on the south; and roughly to Braddish Ave. on the west.

find other homes.

The Department of Education proposes to erect elementary schools on these sites.

Residents of the area will have approximately a year to find other homes.

THIS BRINGS to four the number of school condemnation ordinances passed by the City Council and approved by Mayor D'Alesandro in recent weeks.

On October 30, Mayor D'Alesandro approved Ordinances 1314 and 1318, which turned over to the Department of Education for acquisition properties directly to the north of Madison Square and west of Caroline St. in east Baltimore, and properties in the Carlisle at Bateman Ave. sector.

All of these ordinances came before the Council's Judiciary Committee during the spring for public hearings, and were protested so vigorously by property owners the hearings and action on them were postponed until after the Council's summer recess.

STILL IN the Judiciary Committee are Ordinances:

No. 1288 — To take for junior high and elementary school purposes the properties directly to the north of Harlem Square;

No. 1495 — To take for elementary school purposes properties bounded by Ellamont, Presstman, Rosedale Sts. and roughly to Belmont Ave.

No. 1496 — To take for elementary school purposes properties in the vicinity of Gilmor and Presstman Sts.

Judge will look at apartments

"We feel the permits were issued in error.

This was the comment Wednesday of Benjamin Goldberg, president of the New Ashburton Improvement Association which is fighting construction of three apartment units in the Forest Park area.

Earlier, Baltimore City Court Judge E. Paul Mason took under advisement complaints by the association and Mr. and Mrs. William I. Gosnell, of the 3200 block Carlisle Ave.

New residents of the area, predominately colored, contend that the apartments under construction by the Artaban Court Apartments, Inc. would hurt the neighborhood.

The builders deny this.

The units are proposed for location in the 3100 block Artaban Place, the 3000 block Carlisle Ave., and the 2700 block Rosedale St.

"WE CONTEND that they are row houses and they are not permitted in this area," Mr. Gosnell told the AFRO Wednesday.

At the court hearing attorneys representing both sides were heard and pictures of the homes were shown.

Judge Mason said he would view the area for himself and advise the parties of his decision by mail.

ARTABAN COURTS Apartments won the first round in the battle on Sept. 19 when the Board of Municipal and Zoning Appeals approved the construction over protests of 475 residents.

The zoning board agreed that the homes would not be row homes and that the proposed structures met population density requirements.

Work on the apartments has reached the second-floor stage it was reported.

Mr. Goldberg said his group would have 30 days in which to appeal an adverse city court ruling but whether they do or not will "depend on his decision, whether we still feel we would have a chance to win."

'I have tried to accomplish something worthwhile'—Horton

By MAX JOHNSON

"You know, this has been an experience I consider priceless . . . I have tried hard to accomplish something worthwhile here . . . I have tried hard to get the goodwill of the citizens in this district . . . and, that's very important for policemen."

The short, stocky man in a black alpaca coat stopped pulling things nervously from drawers of his desk at Northwestern District Police Station Wednesday morning, and said this earnestly, almost confidentially.

The man in the black alpaca coat has a good - natured air, and a face that smiles easily, such as might belong to a banker or a successful businessman.

He is neither of these, however, military bars designating the rank of captain are pinned to the shoulders of the black alpaca coat.

The short, stocky man is Captain Millard B. Horton, and Wednesday was his last day in command of the Northwestern District, Baltimore's largest police district. A district he has commanded for the past six years, since November, 1951.

He is being transferred to Northeastern District, the city's second largst district. His transfer is a part of a general transfer of district commanders ordered a few days ago by Police Commissioner James M. Hepbron.

CAPTAIN HORTON shuffled some papers on his desk, put them in a basket, then looked at them a second time, and pulled them out again to put them back where they were at first.

"A lot of policemen don't like to come in this district," he said slowly. "But, once they are here, there is something about the work here that seems to get in their blood, and they usually do all right.

"There is a growing team up here, with more and more of the civic groups and churches working closer and closer with the policemen. And when you have that, you are sure to get a better community. Right?"

The short, stocky man in the black alpaca coat paused to look about his desk for a stump of a cigar he habitually carries. He accepted a fresh cigar rather reluctantly from his visitor, looked at it suspiciously, and turned his eyes a bit more happily to an almost two-inch stub of cigar resting in an ashtray.

"IF WE COULD just get a closer cooperation between citizens and the police department," Capt. Horton began again, "there would be far less crime.

"Of course, the policeman must have a different aspect toward his duties today. He must help sell himself to the public. My policy is that there must be more and more of this goodwill between the citizens and the policemen."

What, specifically, is needed to lower crime in the Northwestern District?

"Good street lighting, and more uniformed policemen on the streets, particularly in the more troublesome spots," Capt. Horton answered quickly.

"And, what is also important, more attention by churches and civic organizations to the youngsters on the streets without proper home care, or proper supervision. Right?"

WHAT HAS given him the most satisfaction during his six years of commanding Northwestern District

NORTHEASTERN GOODBYE—Magistrate Linwood G. Koger, who sits in the Northwestern Police Court, is shown saying goodbye to Capt. Millard Horton who has been moved from the district to the Northeastern District.

under Capt. Horton has a personnel of some 400 policemen including women traffic guards near schools.

Capt. Horton is married, and he and Mrs. Lucile Horton have two children. A daughter, Mrs. James Donald Groseclose, who is an expectant mother, and Millard B., Jr., a Baltimore Junior College student.

Capt. and Mrs. Horton live at 4313 Sheldon Ave.

How does he feel about leaving Northwestern?

"Well," Capt. Horton said philosophically, "changes must be made in the police department, as in other organizations. Right?"

Capt. Horton got up to don his regulation police officer's jacket to pose for a photo. Directly after the photo, he reached fondly for the black alpaca coat with the captain's military bars on the shoulders.

Interest in people, problems led Mrs. Reed to present job

"I like and am interested in people and their problems," Mrs. Anne Reed, medical social worker for the Maryland Tuberculosis Association, at the Druid Health Center, in a recent interview, similingly gave this as the reason she chose her profession.

Mrs. Reed recently rounded out a year with the Maryland Tuberculosis Association. She has worked primarily with tuberculous cases, who visit the Druid Health Center for follow-up treatment and social service.

Looking up from a crowded desk, stacks of papers attesting to the full schedule, Mrs. Reed explained:

"This is a demonstration project in the Maryland Tuberculosis Association. I interview all patients with problems, particularly newly diagnosed patients."

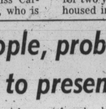
MRS. REED further explained that she visits the homes and families of patients. In an attempt to help solve their personal problems, Mrs. Reed sometimes refers patients to other agencies, such as the Department of Public Welfare, Family and Children's Society, Planned Parenthood, the Salvation Army, the American Red Cross.

Sometimes a wife in need of financial support from her husband is referred to the Probation Dept. Mrs. Reed may even refer a discharged patient to a job or perhaps to the Vocational Rehabilitation Office where he is given tests and may receive a scholarship.



Mrs. Reed

One of Mrs. Reed's most conspicuous achievements in the more than a year she has worked at the Druid Health Center, has been the establishment of a Clothing Closet. Civic groups and interested individuals donate clothes to the Closet to be used for tuberculous patients and former patients.

"They go so fast; we really can't keep a supply," Mrs. Reed commented, adding that the Clothing Closet is in need of clothing, which may be sent to her at the Druid Health Center, 1313 Druid Hill Ave.

REFERRING TO her work with patients, Mrs. Reed asserted:

"It is easier for them to accept treatment and recommendations after they have resolved their personal problems."

Typical of the nearly 300 patients, Mrs. Reed has counseled while at the Druid Health Center were a bespectacled 78-year-old widower, and a 30-year-old separated mother of an 11-year-old daughter, who came in during the interview.

The man wanted underclothing and complained that his dentures "don't fit me right." The young matron has a job in a laundry and is working hard to provide for herself and her young daughter.

Mrs. Reed noted that one of her big problems is with patients who walk out of hospitals before they are released by the authorities.

BUSY AS she is both with home visits and with counseling patients at the Health Center, 34-year-old Mrs. Reed still manages to keep a beautiful home for her interior decorator husband, Frank, and their three-year-old daughter, Annette.

A graduate of Douglass High School, Mrs. Reed has a B.S. degree from Lincoln Morgan State College and an M.S. degree from Howard University.

Some of her happiest experiences, Mrs. Reed recalls, is merry twinkle in her bright eyes, are the letters and sometimes actual visits, she receives from grateful former patients, who have "graduated" into the busy world of earning a living.

DR. MACEO WILLIAMS, District Health Officer of Druid Health Center, referring to Mrs. Reed's work, observed: "We have been treating the disease, now it seems to me, we should be treating people who have the disease."

Dr. Williams stated further that only a social worker can get a patient who thinks he is healthy, to accept a doctor's diagnosis to go to a tuberculosis hospital.

"The doctor doesn't have the time, doesn't know the technique. A patient won't go unless he knows his family is going to be taken care of," Dr. Williams commented, adding:

"It's not sufficient to find TB, but you must put patients under treatment. That's where your social worker comes in."

Then looking admiringly at Mrs. Reed, Dr. Williams asked: "Who would think of a Clothing Closet, but a social worker?"
