—Kier dies tonight

tragedy to your family," but explained he must uphold the law. He added, "Please believe me, my sympathy goes out to you."

THE DOOMED youth's mother, Mrs. Frances Jarvis, who was permitted to visit her son for the last time on Thursday, told the AFRO she has decided that the death sentence of her son "may be one of my trials."

When asked whether she would also make a last-minute appeal on her son's behalf, she replied, "I trust in the Lord."

A deeply religious woman, Mrs. Jarvis now resides on N. Gilmor St., with a four-year-old son and is employed at a North west Baltimore laundry.

She told the AFRO on Wednesday that the entire experience, arrest of her son, the two trials, appeals to the high court, had rendered her 'a sick woman."

She said her physician had recommended she secure employment to help her get her mind off her troubles.

AT THE time of her son's arrest, Mrs. Jarvis said, "I don't have any idea that my son did it, but if he did, he must have been sick . . ."

She called him a hard worker who was 'overtaxed and strained, buying food for me and the kid since I've been sick."

It was the mother who told the AFRO that Kier was the son and grandson of ministers. He was born in Roanoke, Va., was reared here in Baltimore and attended school through the eighth grade.

At the time of his arrest, the family was residing in the 2900 block of Westwood Ave.

Kier will be the second man to die in the state's new gas chamber which replaced hanging as capital punishment. First was Eddie Lee Daniels, who died June 28, 1957 for the robbery-murder of a Silver Spring, Md. car wash owner.

THE CRIME for which Kier, a one time Sunday school teacher must die, originated in the summer of 1956 when the body of Mrs. Bopst, a prominent county socialite, was found in her fashionable Charles St. Ave. home.

According to police, the well-to-do matron had been beaten with a sword, a silent butler, a cast-iron horse, and stabbed with a hunting knife.

Soon after the slaying a neighbor told police that a young man had been in the neighborhood seeking work.

The neighbor gave police the name and address the youth had given her.

Police arrested Kier in his Westwood Ave. home where he shared a small apartment with his mother and small stepbrother.

MRS. FRANCES JARVIS

FOLLOWING Kier's first trial in September at Towson, his attorneys asked for a new trial on the grounds that a confession the state introduced as evidence was obtained under duress and promises of leniency.

The defense contended that Kier was never advised that anything he said could be used against him.

They challenged the right of the defendant to take the witness stand to tell his story without being subjected to cross-examination by the state.

The defense argued that the defendant, throughout the interrogation was warned to tell the truth and that this constituted both a threat and a promise.

Capt. Gilbert Doyle testified that the memoirs were used to "inspire confidence in the subject."

IN THEIR summations, Mr. Murphy and Mr. Bates criticized county police for using what they termed, "brain washing" methods.

After deliberating for an hour Judges Michael Paul Smith and Lester L. Barrett discounted psychological warfare claims and ruled that neither confession had been obtained by inducements or promises.

Following the two-day trial in which Kier was found guilty, the judges deferred imposition of sentence pending a motion for a new trial.

ONE MONTH later the motion was denied when Judges John B. Gestrum and Stewart O. Day agreed with the two judges to make the refusal unanimous.

In 1957 the Court of Appeals set aside the conviction of Kier.

It held that a confession had been obtained under threat and inducement.

In October of 1957, following a second trial at Frederick, Md., Kier was condemned to death a second time.

The confessions attributed to him were not admitted as evidence at that trial.

However a key witness, Robert Washington, Kier's former cellmate testified that Kier had confessed to him while confined in the city jail.

Washington revealed that Kier killed the matron after she had gone with robbers as a motive.

COSTLY FIRE—Owners of these three homes in the 2400 block McCulloh St., suffered losses early this month when a three-alarm fire of undetermined origin started in the middle building at 2434 owned by Richard Babb. The home on the left, 2432, is that of Mrs. Mildred Berry. Oscar Shorter resided on the right at 2436.

Kier was placed under pressure his attorneys produced what many observers said was the most detailed description of police methods they had ever heard in court testimony.

The defense argued that the defendant, throughout the interrogation was warned to tell the truth and that this constituted both a threat and a promise.

She replied positively and without hesitation:

"I got a good look at his face when he came in the store.

"I am certainly closer to him than I am to you now."

ALSO GIVING positive identification of the accused was Howard Francis Scott, a soldier who then lived in the 2000 block N. Monroe St.

Mr. Scott told the court this story:

"I was walking my dog on Walbrook Ave. and my attention was drawn to a man, because my dog growled at him.

"He was on Walbrook Ave. midway the block."

Mr. Scott said he walked his dog down past the cleaning shop and was returning about 10 minutes later and noticed the door to the shop was partly closed, and the clerk was not in the shop.

"I came back," he told the court "and a man ran out of the store door and continued running east on Walbrook Ave.

"Who was this gentleman?" Mr. Price asked.

"He was the same one who had been standing midway the block when my dog growled at him," Mr. Scott answered.

Under questioning by Mr Price, Mr. Scott identified the accused man as the one he noted on the scene the morning of the attack.

MR. SCOTT said he saw Miss Johnson come up to the window with "all of her body covered with blood."

He said he then ran and called the police

During the time Miss Johnson and Mr. Scott identified as the assailant, the accused man looked directly at each of them without change of the gloomy expression he has maintained since the trial began.

Smith, who has appeared in court wearing a grey striped sport coat, grey trousers, white rimmed glasses, could get up to 35 years if convicted.

The assault to murder carries a 15-year maximum, and the attempted robbery with a deadly weapon conviction carries a 20-year maximum sentence.

THE TRIAL on Wednesday was devoted primarily to the question of whether alleged statements made by Smith to Sergeant Joseph Judd, Northwestern district plainclothes officer, should be aired before the jury.

Judge Byrnes ruled that these alleged statements were admissible and Sgt. Judd was called to the stand again Thursday morning to repeat them to the jury.

Sgt. Judd told the court that he and Officer Raymond Smith were interrogating the defendant in th sergeant's room in Northwestern police station about seven hours after the attack and this conversation took place between them.

"THE DEFENDANT asked me was she (Miss Johnson) going to die." I said 24 hours will tell if she passes the crisis.

"He said what's the matter with her. Officer Smith said she had a lump on her head.

"I then asked Smith if he meant to harm her. He said 'I did not mean to hurt her.'

"I asked him did he threaten her. He said 'I did not threaten her.'

"I asked him why he went in there.

He said 'I meant to rob her.'

"I asked him if he took any money. He said 'I looked around the front for money but I didn't find any and left.'

* * *

SGT. JUDD said Smith told him he had walked to the vicinity of the cleaners and purchased a soda in a nearby grocery store and had bought comic books in a drug store.

The sergeant said the accused had blood stains on a pair of white tennis shoes, dungarees and a tee shirt he was wearing when arrested about an hour after the attack.

He said Smith told him the blood was from a nose bleed he had while playing basketball shortly before at Douglass High School.

LT. DANIEL J. KENNEDY of the Police Crime Crime Laboratory told the court on Thursday that his analysis of the stained clothing showed human blood insufficient in quantity for the grouping.

Sgt. Judd also stated that the defendant dictated, and he drew a diagram of the area showing the route he had taken to the establishment prior to the attack.

He said he had given Smith a copy of the diagram at his request.

The Sergeant said Smith had given no signed statement, and later denied the oral statements when questioned again in the presence of his attorney.

Officer Smith told substantially the same story and added that on one occassion the accused had put his hand on Sgt. Judd's revolver when being led back to the cell after the interrogation.

"I partly pulled my own revolver," Officer Smith said.

MISS JOHNSON has appeared in court wearing a dark dress, black full length coat, without a hat.

When on the stand she gave her testimony in a strong clear voice.

She said she is still employed by the company on a lighter job at a plant.

AT THE time of the attack, Northwestern Police Captain described the arrest of a suspect "one of the best pieces of police work I have seen."

During the trial, John Smith, father of the accused, has sat on a front court room seat.

Mrs. Mildred Smith, the boy's mother has been excluded from the court room along with other witnesses.

THE DEFENSE LAUNCHED its case at Thursday afternoon's session with Mrs. Smith, mother of the accused on the stand.

Mrs. Smith testified that during a visit and resulting argument at Northwestern Police Station with investigating officers, Sgt. Judd told her, "Mrs. Smith, I am going to do all I can to send your boy away for a long time."

Two alibi witnesses produced by the defense were Roland and Miss Rolanda Handy, 1900 block Clifton Ave., who testified that Smith had come to their home about 10 a.m. on the edate of the attack and washed his hands and then left after a short stay.

A surprise witness was Mr. Allen, one of Smith's attorneys. Mr. Allen testified that he had advised his client not to make any statements and that Smith and Sgt. Judd had engaged in an argument over whether Smith had made a statement during the course of his visit to Northwestern Police station.

The trial was scheduled to resume at 10 a.m. This (Friday) morning with young Smith slated to be one of the first witnesses.

Douglass High School continued in search of her first win in Maryland Scholastic Association swimming competition Tuesday, after absorbing a 64-21 pasting at the hands of Calvert Hall.

Both Douglass and. Calvert Hall are grouped in Divison 1, of the MSA. The latter is undefeated in four dual meets this season.

The visitors swept eight firsts in the ten-event program and acquired six second places.

Douglass' only two victories were registered in the 100-yard backstroke, by Smith, and in the diving competition by King. The latter event was a one-two finish for Douglass, Fisher being runner-up to King.

the feathers are mighty pretty but the hook can hurt

The defenders of public power have done a first-rate job of making their bare enticing—but it's still a trap.

They began by giving their scheme an attractive name, suggesting a project owned by all the people and operated for the common good. "Private" power, conversely, seems to connote an enterprise conducted for private profit, and depriving the people of part of the benefit that should accrue to them.

From there on the public power advocates reason thus: The sources of power (such as fast-moving water) are natural resources belonging to everyone, and should not be allowed to fall into private hands.

There's the delusion. All industries use natural resources of one kind or another. But no resource has much value until it is extracted, cultivated, or otherwise made useful by human effort. This effort, which is "privately" exerted by individuals, is the real cost of the final product, and accounts for most of its price.

No matter who does the job of converting a raw resource to a useful commodity—government or private enterprise—the same essential costs must still be paid. The question therefore boils down to this: Under what type of organization—public ownership or private ownership—is power likely to be generated most economically, and paid for by those who should logically pay for it, the users?

Right there's the hook. Because under public ownership, some people get electricity at tax-free rates, while others pay taxes not only on the "private" power they use themselves but must ante up still more taxes to pay for the publicly owned power projects too.

Because America long ago chose private enterprise against "public" control of economic activity, its people today are rich and strong and free. If they mean to stay that way, they had better stop nibbling around the bright but deadly "public power" bait.*

GOD AND COUNTRY AWARD — Milton Owens, 16, is the first Explorer Scout in Baltimore to be honored with this award in about 10 years. The son of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Owens Sr., the junior Mr. Owens is an 11th grade pupil at Baltimore City College. He is a member of Sharon Baptist Church where he is on the deacons' board, and takes part in many other church activities including serving his elders communion.

Deacon, 16, wins BSA God and Country Award

For the first time in more in some 10 years, a lad youth has won the God and Country Award from the Boy Scouts of America.

Milton Owens Jr., 16-year-old Explorer Scout, senior at Baltimore City College and a member of the deacons' board honored with the award.

A God and Country Award represents the Scout's faithful service to his church.

For a period of four months, the awardee must work closely with his own minister and receive his signature in a book-let to show he has passed from one level to another in working toward the award.

SINCE THE AWARD is sponsored by the Protestant Committee on Scouting, the Scout studies questions from a pamphlet they publish.

The pamphlet questions lead to showing the Scout reads the Bible daily and is active in church activities.

The Scout must describe such Bible events as the Baptism the Lord's Supper and give a written statement of the principle beliefs of his denomination.

He is sometimes quizzed by his pastor and other officials of the church on the contents of the pamphlet.

After a year and a half's working toward the award he completing the pamphlet.

"It was mostly on church activities," and how the church is run he said.

This made it much easier for him because in his church Sharon Baptist, Milton does "almost anything I'm asked to do."

A MEMBER of Sharon Baptist for ten years, young Milton is actually a member of the deacon board and performs the dame duties in that position as an older member of the board.

His duties include serving communion and helping solve business activities and church problems.

He is also a member of the choir there and has represented the church at various youth conferences.

Young Mr. Owen's Scout unit, Explorer Post 257, also selected him last year for the Explorer Scout Award, the fraternal organization of Boy Scouts of America.

AN ELEVENTH grade pupil, young Mr. Owens says:

"I haven't decided about which college I'd like to attend yet."

However, he has his sights set on the ministry. "My grandmother says I've always been around the church since I was six or seven years old.

"When I'm there, I feel at home," he added.

"It's hard to explain why I want to be a minister," he said. "It isn't something you can explain like 'I want to be a minister because . . .'"

THE AWARDEE is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Owens Sr., and lives with his parents, three younger brothers and one sister at 2531 Edmondson Ave.

All of the family are members of Sharon Baptist. The senior Mr. Owens is a barber.

Dewey Carrie is committee man-in-charge of young Mr. Owens' Explorer Post at church.

Must renew interest in history says Hughes

"Some say there is no need to stress colored history now. Integration is really only beginning . . . and there should be a greater interest in colored history."

These were the words of Morris Hughes who appeared in behalf of the colored man on the American scene, when he spoke Monday afternoon at Enon Baptist Church.

"There are many fields of American life in which we have not gained a foothold.

"Until we do, there is need to study our own culture and background," he said.

Mr. Hughes says that this should be done "if for no other reason than to help integration and to win the respect and understanding of our white brothers."

"Everywhere I have been," he said, "I've found a new interest in colored life, culture and history.

"It sounds absurd for us to say we aren't interested (if and when we are questioned)."

THE FAMED CREATOR of the famous bookstore in Harlem, Mr. Hughes said, there is a bookstore that specializes in colored history.

He said with rising colored attendance in integrated schools, the rising percentage of colored in previously white neighborhoods, have sent teachers and many others to this bookstore.

"They have found the need to understand (colored people) and there should be a greater interest and stress (among colored people) on our history now," he added.

Mr. Hughes appeared in Baltimore to mark the official opening of the Book Fair at Cumberland St. and Pennsylvania Ave. where books by and about colored people are the specialty.

IN HIS discussion, he said many ignore colored history thinking something is in the background to be ashamed of.

"Slavery was not the beginning of our history in America," he said.

"Some of the earliest explorers to come to the New World were colored and they were known as navigators—your own Frederick Douglass (native of Eastern Shore, Md).

Calling attention of other greats to come from slavery, Mr. Hughes mentioned "Harrie' Tubman, who came through Baltimore carrying others to their freedom.

"She was not content to be free herself. She carried a plot and when some one decided to turn back (to bondage) she would show her pistol to them and say, 'You gonna' be free You ain't gonna' be no slave no more,'" he related.

Mr. Hughes said this history is full of delightful stories and more people could profit if they looked into them.

"One came with Columbus, with Vasco DaGama— they were North African Moors—

A historian tells a story in one book, he said, of a colored explorer who came to the New World in 1522.

This explorer was said to have been shipwrecked off the coast of Florida and wandered for eight years in that area.

Mr. Hughes told his audience the man lived with Indians and finally roamed to Mexico, and launched an exploration there that resulted in the opening up of the entire Northwest to European settlers.

* * *

"THERE ARE many thrilling stories in history that have nothing to do with slavery," he said.

"Slavery has nothing to do with disgrace.

"We were enforced into slavery and out of the slave period came many colored inventors
