Loan firm indicted on mail fraud charges

Trial has been set for January 11 before Judge R. Dorsey Watkins in Federal Court.

Assistant United State's attorney Arnold M. Weiner, will handle the case.

BALTIMORE

The First Colony Savings and Loan Association, Prince Frederick, Calvert County, was indicted Tuesday by the Federal Court grand jury which charged the company with using the mails in a scheme to defraud.

Two paragraphs of the 19-page, 32 paragraph indictment dealt with the company's transactions with the A.I. Cassell Land Corporation, controlled by a prominent Washington architect who wanted to begin a fashionable development in the Southern Maryland area.

* * *

OTHER ALLEGATIONS in the indictment were that the loan company advertised they offered 5 per cent dividends and sent ten - thousand brochures through the mail to entice people into believing they were a well established corporation.

They also attempted to conceal the fact that they had no investments, had earned no income, and therefore, could not pay the 5 per cent dividends as they advertised, it was alleged.

Further, the indictment said, in November, 1958, the company had $100,000 in expenses but only $74.30 to its account and that monies of the company's investors were used to pay the expenses.
