To decide if NAACP must name members

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D.C. (NNPA)—The Supreme Court Wednesday took under advisement the question of whether NAACP branches can be forced to disclose their membership lists under city ordinances requiring nonprofit organizations claiming exemption from occupation tax to furnish such information.

The question was argued before the court by Robert L. Carter, general counsel for the NAACP, representing Mrs. Daisy Bates of Little Rock and Mrs. Birdie Williams of North Little Rock, and Joseph C. Kemp, City Attorney of Little Rock.

Asked by Justice Potter Stewart what were the significant differences in the facts of the two cases, Mr. Carter replied that Mr. Kemp contended that there had been fuller compliance by Mrs. Williams with the demand of the City of North Little Rock for information required by the ordinance.

• • •

HE SAID HE DID not agree with this contention because there had been a stipulation that the only issue in the two cases was the failure to furnish the membership lists of the North Little Rock and the Little Rock NAACP branches.

Mrs. Williams gave the City of North Little Rock a financial statement, he said, but refused to give the names of members and contributors on the ground that they would be subjected to various kinds of reprisals and the city had no authority to demand such information.

The Arkansas Supreme Court construed the ordinance, known as the "Bennett Ordinance" (because it was the brainchild of State Attorney General Bruce Bennett) as requiring disclosure of members and contributors.

Mr. Carter explained that financial contributors to the NAACP includes the entire membership list.

The "Bennett Ordinance" is not a tax ordinance, Mr. Carter argued, it is unconstitutional, Mr. Carter argued, because it demands the names of members and contributors.

• • •

HE SAID THE Supreme Court decision in the NAACP case against the State of Alabama controlling. In that case the Supreme Court ruled that the NAACP could not legally be held in contempt of court for failure to produce its membership lists.

Mr. Carter also argued that the "Bennett Ordinance" is unconstitutional because there is no "reasonable relationship" between its objective to determine tax status and the demand that names of members and contributors be given.

The purpose of the "Bennett Ordinance", Mr. Carter declared, is to curb the activities of the NAACP in both Little Rock and North Little Rock "because it has been found that the most effective way to curb NAACP activities in the south is publication of names of members and contributors."

• • •

MR. CARTER added that "this frightens people and people become afraid to participate in organizational activities and people are subjected to various pressures."

Justice Felix Frankfurter asked Mr. Carter whether there was anything in the case to indicate that in the actual enforcement and operation of the ordinance the NAACP "was singled out".

Mr. Carter replied that he did not think he was in position to make that kind of argument.

"We were not in position to get information as to how it was applied," he said.

It is our feeling that the ordinance is directed against us, and we are the only organization they seek to force to comply with this ordinance.

• • •

THE CASES OF Mrs. Bates and Mrs. Williams were tried separately but since they involved the same issues they were consolidated in the Arkansas Supreme Court.

Mrs. Bates was notified to furnish the names of members and contributors of the Little Rock Branch, J. C. Crenshaw, branch president, on Dec. 31, 1957, furnished the names of officers and the financial status of the branch on Jan. 3, and by Dec. 1, 1957, but declined to give the names of members and contributors on the ground that the climate of public opinion in Arkansas was adverse to the NAACP and that such disclosure might lead to reprisals and physical harm to members.

For failure to furnish the names of members and contributors Mrs. Bates was convicted and fined $100 in the Little Rock Municipal Court. On appeal, she was given a new trial in the Pulaski Circuit Court, convicted and fined $25.

Mrs. Williams refused to give the names of members of the North Little Rock Branch because of her fear she was be convicted and fined $25 in the North Little Rock Municipal Court.

The Arkansas Supreme Court upheld the convictions and ruled that the contentions of the NAACP that the ordinances were unconstitutional were without merit. The United States Supreme Court granted a review.

U.S. told to stress liberty, not luxury

WASHINGTON

Catholic bishops of America urged last week that the nation "boldly uphold befor the world the principle of freedom under God rather than material prosperity."

The advice was incorporated in a statement, "Freedom and Peace" issued at the close of the Bishops' annual meeting here.

In the tradition of freedom, they said, "lies the moral strength that makes the contribution of America to the world's rebuilding unique and distinctive."

• • •

DECRYING THE emphasis on material progress, they said:

"Today throughout the world, too often it is thought that when we speak of our American way of life, we are speaking only of a high standard of living."

Referring to Nikita Khrushchev's unfavorable comparison between capitalism and communism in their economic aspects, the bishops said:

"This is not the basic issue. The choice that men and nations must make today is between freedom and coercion.

Pupil test motive scored by speaker

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — A statewide pupil testing program now being conducted was described Thursday as being intended "to defeat integration."

William M. Cooper, director of the placement service for the Norfolk Division of Virginia State College, told a session of the three-day conference of the Virginia Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers that the test, being conducted in the State Education Department, is designed to show high averages for white pupils and low ones for colored.

He added that only the average grades compiled by class, and not individual pupil grades, will be made available to teachers. These class grades, he said, could be used to compare the achievement of a white class with that of a colored one to the disadvantage of the latter.

"Colored pupils," he said, "can come up to national standards if they are given the right chance."

• • •

A RESOLUTION adopted unanimously by the convention delegates called upon Gov. J. Lindsay Almond to "exercise his power of office to step up the desegregation of schools."

The resolution pointed out that while there has been some progress in certain Virginia areas toward desegregation, "It is not commensurate with the length of time the Supreme Court desegregation ruling has been in effect."

Other resolutions adopted at the final convention session called for:

Members to petition their representatives in the General Assembly to legislate for the opening of schools in Prince Edward County.

Seek the continuance of public schools throughout the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Endorse a state-wide compulsory school attendance law.

UNITED NATIONS REPORT

Another 'African Session' in U.N.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — The 13th session of the United Nations was called "the African Session."

Dr. Andre Beladie, president of the 14th session, called it, "The Peace Session."

However, the realities of the situation seem to indicate that it was also an "African session." With nine weeks of the session gone, the shape of things affecting Africa are already discernible.

Three of the seven items on the agenda have had committee consideration. They are ready for final action by the General Assembly. They are:

The question of race conflict in South Africa resulting from the 'apartheid' policies of the Union of South Africa government; the question of Southern West Africa; and, the question of French Nuclear tests in the Sahara.

• • •

FOUR ISSUES not yet ready for General Assembly consideration are:

Information from non-self-governing territories; the future of the trust territory of Cameroons under United Kingdom administration; the question of Algeria; and, treatment of questions of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa.

The question of South Africa's apartheid and related problems has been before the United Nations since 1952. The study was proposed by Ceylon, Cuba, Malaya, Ghana, Haiti, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, United Arab Republic, Uruguay and Venezuela. They said:

"There has not been the slightest indication" that the South African Government has taken any step to respond to United Nations recommendations that it "reconsider governmental policies which impair the right of all racial groups to enjoy the same rights and fundamental freedoms."
