Miss Hutcherson weds Dr. J. Cabell

LYNCHBURG, Va. — Wedding vows were exchanged here last week between Miss Mary Carol Hutcherson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Willie H. Hutcherson of Lynchburg, and Dr. Jasper Theodore Cabell Jr. in ceremony at the Eighth St. Baptist Church.

Officiating at the ceremony was the Rev. William Roberts, pastor of the church.

Music was furnished by Robert Winfrey, organist, and Mrs. Patricia F. Jordan, soloist.

The groom, who is also a native of Lynchburg, is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Jasper T. Cabell Sr.

The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, C. C. Humbles. She wore a formal gown of ivory yarn dyed peau and hand-run Alencon lace. Her empire bodice and high mandarin neckline featured lace encrusted with seed pearls, sugar pearls and crystals.

The bride's three-quarter length sleeves were edged with Alencon lace on English net ruffles. Her detachable train was chapel length and her veil of illusion was held by a complete cover cloche of Alencon lace and seed pearls. She carried a crescent bouquet of seasonal flowers centered with a white orchid.

Honor attendant was the Mrs. William Anderson, a cousin of the bride. Her gown was fashioned of turquoise silk worsted with an empire bodice finished with and three-quarter sleeves. The high-rise waist was outlined with two narrow folds of self fabric, ending in a black scroll effect.

Bridesmaids included Mrs. Howard M. Butler and Mrs. Leroy Cofield, of Lynchburg; Mrs. Kenneth R. Anderson of Alexandria; Mrs. George Avento, a cousin of the bride; and Mrs. William A. Derrick Jr. and Mrs. Richard Murphy, of Washington, D.C.

Democratic Party organizes nationally for unification

By GEORGE J. MARDER

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Democrats are trying for a wedding of opposites.

For the "new populism" of Democratic National Chairman Fred R. Harris to work, he would, among other things, have to bring together the poor and the middle class white with the poor and middle class black.

The political bedfellows would be those claimed by George Wallace as his followers and the loyalists of the new Democratic left.

Rocketbook issues would be expected to bring the two extremes together, very much like civil rights united labor with black groups in the sixties.

To coalesce the two groups, the Democrats would have to convince middle class whites the greater threat to their economic well-being comes from Republican administrations — which the Democrats will charge are business-oriented — than from blacks clamoring for a piece of affluent America.

They also would have to convince militant blacks they must not go it alone, but must join a political coalition similar to the one that brought about civil rights legislation.

It would be an amalgamation of the two slogans "Union Now" and "We Shall Overcome" to create what Harris sees as a "new populism" base for the Democratic Party in the decade.

To some it may seem far-fetched to think of bringing together such diverse groups. But those groups aren't any farther apart than the solid South-labor-liberal-big city machine politics that formed the base of the Democrat's New Deal and the Fair Deal election victories.

There are two recent political experiences that indicate the difficulties and possibilities of a coalition made up of the opposites.

One involves the so-called Philadelphia Plan being pushed by the Nixon administration to open skilled building trade union jobs to blacks. The Philadelphia Plan is a test project to force those unions to open up their ranks to blacks. If it works in Philadelphia, it will be used elsewhere. The Philadelphia Plan entails setting goals on the number of blacks building contractors must seek to hire to qualify for government work. Organized labor insisted that the goals are, in effect, quotas and violate the law. Labor opposed the plan and liberal Democrats were split on it. The fight on the Philadelphia Plan is a bad omen for the new coalition.

On the other hand, an indication of how it can be made to work came during the 1968 elections. Democrats and organized labor feared inroads by Wallace in the major industrial cities, particularly in the Midwest. In the final weeks of the campaign, organized labor and Democrat politicians pushed a drive to offset the Wallace movement. It was keyed to the economic theme that job-holding whites had more to fear from a Republican administration than from blacks demanding civil rights. That late 1968 labor campaign is believed to have been largely successful in countering the backlash. It used the same pocketbook pitch the Democrats expect to make for their new populism.

'70 census takers stress cooperation

of understimating the number of black people in the nation — such as a loss of government aid, the Census Bureau is mounting a massive "community education effort" in preparation for the April census.

According to Paul R. Squires, assistant chief of the bureau's field division, the bureau believes as many as 10 per cent of the black people in the United States may not have been counted in the 1960 census.

In a recent interview, Squires said the effort to inform the black community of the benefits of the census has been going on for several months.

He said those missed most often by the census are young black men who do not want to be listed for fear of running afoul of the law or welfare rules.

He said, however, that the bureau makes clear in its campaign that its records are secret and cannot be used for anything but statistics.

Squires said the census has the support of leaders in the black community

"who see it could result in more black Congressmen, more grants and aid." The census information is used to figure how many Congressmen each state is entitled to.

The 1970 census will be taken three basic ways, all using the mails for at least a part of the process.

In areas of densely-populated areas, questionnaires will be mailed to 40 million households on March 27 with instructions to fill them out and mail them back.

enumerators will go out in mid-April to help fill out in complete forms and check on households for which no response is received.

Followups will be made by telephone only in what Squires called the "toughest situations" — mainly inner-city areas such as the ghettos of New York and New Jersey.

In other areas, which cover the majority of the nation but only about 40 per cent of the population, residents may receive forms by mail but will be asked to hold them for the enumerators to pick up.

Only as a last resort will enumerators go to homes to collect information on persons who have not responded at all.

Nixon to address Congress Jan. 22

Three days after Congress re-convenes on Jan. 19, President Nixon plans to deliver the state of the union message.

The date for the President's message — Jan. 22 — was announced by the White House press secretary.

Imagine a bride in metal dress

By PATRICIA McCORMACK

NEW YORK (UPI) — Imagine clothing woven of metal that won't rust in the rain. Clothing that never goes to the cleaner because steel wool takes off stubborn stains.

Imagine metal parts of clothing that can be switched from one costume to another. A supple metal vest or shirt or skirt.

Imagine a bridal gown made of mostly metal.

Such things have no place in the imagination of Stanley Hagler, award-winning designer. They're "here and now" because he's already fashioned a prototype of the metal wardrobe — clearly marking metal the "in" material for fashions of the seventies.

Hagler, who holds 11 of the coveted swarovski awards for great designs in jewelry (the oscar of the jewelry field), is a Denver attorney turned designer.

The clothes featuring metal also are "here and now" to Dorothy Melford, designer for fashions worn in movies, the theatre and television.

She and Hagler have to their credit the chase maid of metals wardrobe.

The variety of metals in the wardrobe ranged the field from copper to brass and aluminum and stainless steel.

Those leading the movement to new uses for metals go beyond wearing apparel. As one spokesman put it:

"Why not metal draperies and carpets some day?" why not.

Carter-Cooper nuptials held

MARTINSVILLE, Va. — Miss Mary Emma Cooper, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William L. Anderson, Armstead Avenue.

Wedding music including "Love, Here Is My Heart," preceded the double ring ceremony.

The bride was gowned in magna faille turquoise, with a sweetheart neckline and long sleeves; and accessories. She carried a white Bible with streamers.

Mrs. Grace Jordan, sister of the bride, was matron of honor. The flower girl was Miss Brenda Hairston; the bride's other attendants were Mrs. Mary A. Cooper, Miss Robin R. Hairston and Mrs. Faith B. Hairston.

Otis C. Jordan was best man. Mrs. Cooper wore a beige dress, with accessories.

After the wedding, the couple and friends were entertained at the home of G. Mae Jordan, West Fayette Street.

The couple will reside in Martinsville where Mr. Carter is an employee at the Lester Lumber Company, Inc.

Stax Records names

MEMPHIS — Stax's executive vice president, Al Bell, has announced the appointment of John Smith, Stax' statistician and market analyst, to the newly created position of administrative assistant to the Executive Vice President.

Before coming to Stax in June 1969, Smith taught at Carver High School in Lonoke, Arkansas, after being graduated from Kansas University at Lawrence, Kansas.
