Chief Justice Burger visits Institution in Jessup

The Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, a proponent for reform in the nation's correctional system, recently visited the Maryland House of Correction and the Correctional Camp Center, in Jessup, to learn firsthand the problems confronting Maryland's corrections personnel.

The visit by Chief Justice Warren Earl Burger on Jan. 18, was the latest in a series of tours of correctional institutions in the Washington area.

"As you probably know, I have always been interested in corrections," Chief Justice Burger told Ralph L. Williams, Warden of the Maryland House of Correction. "I've found from my experiences that the most severe critics of our prison systems are the people who run the system."

Based on this experience, he told Mr. Williams and Joseph G. Cannon, Commissioner of the Maryland Department of Correctional Services, he is touring correctional institutions to learn firsthand from correctional management what it feels are the priorities in correctional reform.

The Chief Justice further said that he hoped to use the powers of his office to bring positive attention to the problems confronting the nation's correctional administrators.

At the same time, he said he hoped his interest in the correctional field would prompt other members of the judiciary to become more aware of the problems, such as a lack of funding progressive programs, in the nation's correctional institutions.

"You've seen the inside of a court," Chief Justice Burger told one inmate at the House of Correction "Now it's time for more judges to see the inside of your place"

Following his tour of the House of Correction and the Correctional Camp Center, where Maryland is pioneering in its Work Release program, he discussed the need for alternatives to incarceration for the first-time offender, such as minimum security community centers, and a need for more public support in after-care services as an adjunct to rehabilitation programs.

Anti-war groups to show new film on Vietnam

An anti-war film on the United States' involvement in Vietnam will be presented at Johns Hopkins University on Thursday, Feb. 12 and at Goucher College on Friday, Feb. 13.

Benefit performances of the 90-minute documentary, "Vietnam: In the year of the Pig," beginning at 8:30 will be held at Shriver Hall on the Johns Hopkins campus and at Kraushaar Auditorium to Goucher.

* * *

Directed by Emile de Antonio, the documentary incorporates footage drawn from the film archives of American news and newsreel services and from European and Vietnamese (Saigon, NLF and Hanoi) sources.

The film presentations are being co-sponsored by the Baltimore Moratorium Commitee and the student government organizations of both colleges.

Herbert Held, coordinator of the Moratorium Committee, said tickets are available at $5 for general admission and $2 for student admission at Levering Hall at Johns Hopkins, at the College Center at Goucher, and at the Clothes Horse and the Bum Steer in downtown Baltimore.

Mr. Held said that "proceeds from the benefits will be used by the Moratorium Committee to establish a permanent office in Baltimore to coordinate all local peace-drive activities, and to serve as an information center for this area.

"The film depicts the history of the Vietnamese struggle, tracing the involvement of the French and the United States and suggesting the possible consequences of the current American presence there. Commentary is provided by interviews with participants and observers in all phases of the war."

The director, Mr. de Antonio, also has produced and directed the documentaries, "Point of Order" and "Rush to Judgment."

In this venture, he has been supported financially by such backers as Steve Allen, Miss Lily Auchincloss, Richard Avedon, Leonard Bernstein, Miss Adelaide de Menil, Corliss Lamont, Paul Newman, Miss Abby Rockefellar and Robert Ryan.

In its review of this film, the Boston "Globe" said, "Every once in a while, a well-edited documentary film serves a high social purpose in bringing home to the public important facts about a burning public issue.

"Such a film is Emile de Antonio's 'In the Year of the Pig.' It should be seen."

The film is distributed by McGraw-Hill Contemporary Films, Inc.

Paris fashion collection includes dresses for men

By JOAN DEPPA

PARIS (UPI) — The Paris fashion collections for spring and summer opened today with lots of long hemlines — even for men.

The real fashion news was being made by Designer Philippe Venet, but the best giggle of the day was Jacques Esterel's dresses for men.

* * *

"Virility is in act, not in dress," Esterel said. But the audience wolf whistled when a male model with shoulder-length blonde hair walked down the runway in a purple, calf-length gown that left one shoulder bare.

Esterel, an avowed advocate of the unisex look, did a version of the same outfit for women and to most eyes, "here" was more attractive than "his."

* * *

Over at Philippe Venet, there was no confusion of the sexes.

Venet designs for ladies who are ready to lower their hemlines — and gives them a choice of two important lengths. Although everyone was talking about the midcalf skirts and coats, the dresses and coats that stopped just above the knee probably will be more important for the average woman.

The Designer showed a whole line of above-the-knee coats in printed wool combinations like light and bright green on a cream-colored background gave a gay touch to the understated lines of Venet's collection.

His long coats were all double-faced wools, generally cut in a loose princess style that gave plenty of room for movement.

The one exception was a high-waisted style with a dirndl skirt done with red and navy scrawls on an off-white background with navy cuffs and collar printed in white and red. A narrow navy belt added the final touch.

It was worn over one of Venet's favorite pleated mousseline dresses — the sleeves, a section of its matching scarf and the skirt were all tiny knife pleats.

Teacher says soap needed

The greatest offenders of personal cleanliness seem to be third and fourth graders, with a sprinkling of second and fifth graders.

According to one gym teacher, the problem begins when children reach the age where they want to bathe in privacy and unsupervised by mother. They may be getting into the bathtub every night, but they aren't using soap, or at least, not enough soap to wash away perspiration and odor-causing bacteria. And also, these youngsters aren't shampooing as often as necessary.

This gym teacher points out that working in close quarters with children on parallel bars and other equipment, she is well aware that a nightly soapy lathering is needed for these tremendously active children. So a word to the wise: children as well as adults can have offensive body odor.

When your child begins to take a bath "all by himself" nag, if necessary, in order to insure that he or she includes soap as a part of the routine. Now is the time to instruct a child on how to wash thoroughly. And it may be a good idea to help with shampoos until the youngster can really manage the technique.
