Baltimore Colts will meet the Detroit Lions here Saturday night, Sept. 5 in the fourth annual Jaycee Charity pre-season football game.

The game, to be played in 42,000-seat Carter Stadium on the campus of North Carolina State University, is the fifth pre-season contest announced by the Colts. Baltimore will open its pre-season schedule on Aug. 8 at Oakland, play at Kansas City (Aug. 15) and at Denver (Aug. 22) before meeting the Lions.

The Colts will face the Washington Redskins in their final pre-season game on Sept. 12.

Detroit and the Colts played a 17-17 regular season game last year.

Howard golfers capture CIAA title; 8th for coach

WASHINGTON — Led by senior Calvin Brockington, who also retained his hold on medal honors of the association, Howard University won the annual CIAA golf tournament last week, with a team total of 684 strokes.

Thus did coach John Turpin Jr. add to a growing reputation, as the most successful golf coach in CIAA history. Having won seven straight tournaments at Norfolk State, 1962-68, before shifting to Howard in 1969, he claims eight of the last nine conference championships.

Eight teams entered players at the 1970 event, in which Virginia Union of Richmond was defending champion. In the showdown, however, it was the consistent excellence of the Morgan State entrants that provided the real competition for the victorious Turpin team.

Morgan was second, Va. Union thrid, N.C. Central fourth, and St. Paul's fifth.

On an individual basis, Brockington's 79-77 card, for the 36-hole test, added out to a winning total of 156.

Second place was won by Alvin Hunter of Virginia Union. His card was a reported 85-77, good for a total of 162 stokes.

On a team basis, the Howard accruement of 684 was six points better than the 692 points that marked the combined Morgan State effort. A summation of the five best individual performances were as follows.

Well-known barber wins divorce decree

Walter Henry Lynch Jr., 5919 Baltimore Ave., a well-known barber, was granted a divorce from his wife, Mrs. Margaret Jane Lynch, 3221 Eastern Ave., in a decree signed by Judge Robert B. Watts on May 5.

The Lynches were married July 14, 1963, a total of seven years, and separated, according to testimony before the court, on June 27, 1968 when they resided in the 1300 block Reisterstown Rd.

Mr. Lynch told the court he and his wife agreed to end their marriage because they "couldn't get along" and never resided again under the same roof.

Testifying for the husband was his mother, Mrs. Catherine Lynch, who also resides at the Baltimore Ave. address.

Mrs. Lynch told the court that the wife is a good mother deserving of the custody of the couple's only child, age four.

The wife was awarded $10 a week, the air conditioner and all household furnishings.

The husband was awarded visitation privileges at reasonable times and the right to assume tax exemptions as of an agreement the couple signed on June 27, 1968.

'Feel like 12-year-old,' says Banks after 500th

By ED SAINSBURY

CHICAGO (UPI) — It took 16 years, and Ernie Banks remembered something almost all of them when he hit his 500th major league home run and reached 1,000 major league runs batted in.

He became the ninth player ever to reach the 500 home run figure Tuesday and the 12th to bat in 1,600 runs.

But when the figures were attained, at the age of 39, Banks cavorted in the outfield long after the game was over, shouting "I feel like I'm 12 years old" and leaping and clicking his heels.

"I sure do remember my first home run," he said. "It was in St. Louis Sept. 20 or 21 in 1953, and the pitcher was Gerry Staley.

"The 500th was on a fast ball, inside. They've been pitching me inside because I wasn't getting the bat around, and I was expecting it. I thought he was going in when I hit it.

"I knew it was when I looked out there and saw (Rico) Carty turn around and watch it go."

Banks conceded that his age affected him on the play because "when I get out there between second and third, I felt like that new organ in Wrigley Field was on my back."

* * *

Banks, twice the National League's most valuable player and twice its home run champion, said he had trouble at the opening of the season.

"My timing was off and I was struggling," he said, "but the fans and my teammates kept talking to me, and finally I relaxed. That makes all the difference in my swing.

"When you're tight and pressing, you can't hit the ball. When you're relaxed, you can hit it out. I swing much slower now than I did before. This is a tremendous relief to me and my family."

It took Banks nearly an hour to reach the clubhouse after the game ended. He had four on-camera TV interviews, several radio interviews on tape, and finally a press conference.

When he reached the locker room most of his teammates were gone. But Glenn Beckert and Ron Santo remained to give him a congratulatory handshake, and there was a sign hand lettered in pencil on a shirtboard in his locker. It read, "Congratulations to the Greatest."

Banks laughed and sang, danced and clicked his heels. It might have been his greatest day. But, he said, one thing remains. "To win the National League championship and get in the World Series."

This year it could happen.

Old Taylor Presents: 6 Ingenious Americans.
These black men helped change the world!

Nearly all of these Ingenious Americans were poor and came up the hard way. Most had to work their way through school. Yet each, in his own way, made a lasting contribution to mankind.

These busts are available for just $5 each (that's what they cost us). They're 8" tall, made of antique bronze cast stone, and bear a complete history of the subject. To get them—just fill out the coupon below.

Matthew Henson was an assistant to Admiral Peary on his now-famous expeditions. On the final trip, when Peary lay exhausted and crippled with frostbite, it was Henson who pushed on and became the first man to locate and stand on the North Pole.

Dr. Charles Drew, an expert on blood and its components, introduced the idea of a blood bank. Today, when someone needs blood, the hospital makes a call to the local blood bank. Within minutes the proper type is there. Dr. Drew made it possible to save lives by storing blood.

Dr. Dan Williams worked as a barber to get through high school. Eight years after graduating from medical school, he opened a man's chest and sewed up a knife wound of the heart sac. Dr. Williams performed the world's first heart operation.

Norbert Rillieux developed a fast, inexpensive method of refining sugarcane in 1846. Before this time, it was a luxury for the very few. Because of Rillieux, sugar became inexpensive enough to make all our lives a little sweeter.

Lewis Howard Latimer, son of an escaped slave, became an electrical engineer and an inventor. He invented a method for making carbon filament in an incandescent lamp, which he patented. Eventually he became a noted aide to Thomas Edison and one of the Edison Pioneers. Today, a school in Brooklyn, New York, bears his name.

Benjamin Banneker became a prominent surveyor, mathematician and astronomer. When Major L'Enfant, the original architect of Washington, D.C., packed up and quit, the job was turned over to Banneker, who had transcribed the Major's plans. Banneker played a key role in putting the White House, the Treasury and the Capitol where they are today!
