DR. JENKINS

President of the United States the mood of the black people of the United States."

Dr. Jenkins added that although Mr. Nixon did not make any commitments "at this time, I am hopeful and confident that our conference may have some influence on the policies of this administration."

The Morgan State president allowed, however, that "there's nothing in the history of this administration to indicate there will be a favorable reaction, but I am hopeful."

Observers noted that the statement presented Mr. Nixon was signed by the National Association for Equal Opportunity In Higher Education, which represents predominantly black colleges in all sections of the nation.

The document which outlined the nation's outrage at recent campus killings and suggested corrective means and remedies, is likely to go down in history as an historic statement not only for its present impact but for anyone studying the racial impact of this era.

Also during the conference, the college presidents urged Mr. Nixon to heed the request of black congressmen who have vainly sought a meeting with the Chief Executive.

In addition, the educators caucused after the White House meeting and selected Howard University President James Cheek to be the liaison person to work with C. Alexander Heard, Vanderbilt chancellor, now on special two-month assignment as Mr. Nixon's special advisor on campus affairs.

Dr. Jenkins and fellow college presidents worked over five hours on the position paper presented President Nixon. They gathered as a group of 35 in a Washington hotel.

Earlier in the evening Dr. Jenkins was guest speaker at the 64th annual closing meeting of the DuBois Circle in Baltimore's Hilton Hotel.

In order to meet with his colleagues, the DuBois program was altered to permit him to give his speech and hurry to Washington.

Dr. Jenkins was selected to prepare the wording for the first part of the presentation which dealt with the anger and frustrations.

Dr. Jenkins admitted he was "very pleased' his colleagues picked him to present their concerns.

Observers on Capitol Hill speculate that the college presidents' meeting with Mr. Nixon is the "most forceful" confrontation the President has had since he took office 16 months ago.

Another observer told the AFRO that in the past, black college presidents have been viewed by the public as 'conservative.'

It was suggested that because of their strong position paper to Mr. Nixon, black college presidents might well be classed as 'the most militant group of Prodigal Son.'"

College and university presidents in the United States.

Still another observer reminded this reporter that the President is the 'most powerful influential person in the world,' and the fact that the meeting with black college presidents, originally scheduled for just 45 minutes, lasted over two hours, indicated the President was "intensely impressed."

MARYLAND SOCIAL WORKERS

EMERGENCY MEETING

All employed social workers are invited to a meeting sponsored by the Maryland Chapter of the National Association of Social Workers at 7 P.M. on Thursday, May 28, 1970 at The Village of Cross Keys, 5100 Falls Road.

The escalation of the war in Cambodia and tragic student deaths are moving the Maryland Association, along with 50,000 national members, to seek a reordering of national priorities in line with human values.

fiscal 1972 to increase the funding of programs to improve the educational institutions of black Americans and strengthen the overall internal life of the black community across the nation.

Asked how President Nixon felt about their suggestions that he meet with the aroused college students, the college presidents said Mr. Nixon said that might be "desirable" but he didn't say that he would do it.

Among the group of university officials was Dr. John Peoples, president of Jackson State College, where two students were killed and 13 others injured last week in a police gun fire assault on the girl's dormitory after a campus demonstration.

Dr. Peoples gave a graphic report on this atrocity to Mr. Nixon and left with the President pictures showing the horrible scenes.

In answer to reporters questions, the college presidents said Mr. Nixon expressed regret about all the recent confrontation tragedies.

Prior to sending the 15-man delegation to see Mr. Nixon, some 200 college presidents, members of the National Association held an hour long conference Tuesday night at the Washington Hilton Hotel. All expressed grave concern about national policies contributing to the current unrest.

'There Is A Bomb In Your Building'

"There is a bomb in your building."

A crank call, recently sent students, teachers, and administrators of the Concentrated Employment Program (CEP) scurrying from their headquarters on 24th St. and Maryland Ave., as police bomb experts searched the premises thoroughly and, fortunately, found nothing.

The bomb scare is the latest in a series of problems the federally funded program has been having. Severe criticism of CEP has plagued the program since its inception in June, 1967.

Such criticism recently came from one of the project's own students, Mrs. Ruth Sheppard of the 1800 block W. North Ave.

Mrs. Sheppard enrolled in a sixteen week Adult Education Course in November of last year. She told the AFRO that after completing the course, which included math, English, science, and literature, she received, "two job offers; one was work in a kitchen and one was in a hotel as a maid," she stated.

Bitter, she added, "I don't even have to know how to read or write to do that. Its not fair." She further said, "Its a big front; everybody in there has to get a job on their own. I don't know what they are there for."

Although in hot water, even from within its own ranks, a number of trainees feel that the program is making positive gains in helping the disadvantaged, especially black people.

Three such CEP supporters, all students, said that the program served a definite need.

"There are a surprising number of high-school dropouts, who are not aware of this program," said Julius Martin. He and two fellow trainees, Miss Catherine Anne Jackson and Miss Mildred Allen, just passed their "High School Equivalence Test" and hope to enroll at Community College of Baltimore in a CEP-sponsored course called "New Careers."

The high-school program conducted by the State Department of Education, includes English, math, science, literature, and social studies. The trio of recent graduates received their diplomas and are spending the additional time tutoring to other students enrolled in the course.

Fred Nims, Project Director of C.E.P., he explained to the AFRO: "CEP is nothing but an Anglicized O.I.C." OIC, (Opportunities Industrialization (Center) founded in Philadelphia, was the first black job-training and employment project in the country, said Nims, a native Philadelphian.

Nims recalled how, after graduating from college and doing a hitch in the Army, he was unable to find a job. "I couldn't get a job nowhere. I had to drive a cab," he said.

This frustrating experience motivated the young director to involve himself in the O.I.C. program. After leaving the Philadelphia project, which by that time had expanded nationally, under the leadership of the Rev. Leon H. Sullivan, Nims came to Baltimore where he was offered the directorship of CEP.

Encountering the "same racial hang-ups with white employers" that he had confronted in O.I.C., the director said that: "We developed a two-prong attack. We took brothers and sisters and raised their level and tried to get the employers to lower their standards."

He explained that oftimes when blacks apply for a job, the employer gives them a test which really has nothing to do with the job. "All these little tests are usual verbal test," he stated, adding that the reason that most black applicants fail to pass them is because of the difficulties with the English language.

"Black people have a sub-culture and English is a second language to black people." To remedy this, heavy emphasis is placed on developing reading, and writing skill among the project's trainees.

One of the most notable accomplishments of the Concentrated Employment Program, was its successful effort to get the State Department of Parole and Probation to parole the inmate to the CEP program.

As a result of that agreement with the State, many prisoners were released who otherwise, would have had to remain in prison for lack of a job.

Components of the organization include a "Skills ter" under the aegis of the the State Department of Education, which teaches practical nursing, typing, clerical work, welding, etc.; the OIC, center and the New Careers Program offered by the Community College of Baltimore. Also all enrollees receive a free med'cal examination at the Eastern Health Center.

Man says he sells $2100 weekly in dope

Larry T. Allsberry, 31, 700 block E. 20th St., accused of the January, 1969 murder of Mickey Griffin, tavern owner, will get a new trial later this year.

Last Friday Judge J. Gilbert Prendergast dismissed the jury after they stayed out six hours and failed to return a verdict.

The trial revolved around the slaying of the owner of the tavern at Greenmount Ave. and 24th St. and had James McAllister as defense attorney.

Earlier this year, Homer Smith Jr., 21, 2600 Barclay St., pleaded guilty that he fired the first shot and was given a life sentence.

In his own defense, Allsberry testified he had no reason to wish to rob anyone since he had been making $2,100 selling dope each week.

He also said he was in the barber shop the day of the incident and had $700 plus two diamond rings in his pockets.

Also awaiting trial is Eugene Allen, 22, 400 block E. 27th St. Thomas Caskey was prosecutor.
