MUSICAL MOMENTS

Joseph Eubanks heard with Goucher glee club, choir

By ADAH K. JENKINS

Joseph Eubanks, bass baritone, holds an increasingly prominent place in the musical scene this season.

Possessing an excellently supported and controlled voice of power and quality, he has the advantage of superior training and extensive experience in concert and opera.

The singer was guest soloist at the recent convocation of Goucher College at which recognition was given Phi Beta Kappa initiates and other winners of academic awards.

Mr. Eubanks was heard in the aria "Vouchsafe O Lord" from the "Dettingen Te Deum" by Handel and Copland's "Simple Gifts."

With the Goucher Glee Club and College Chapel Choir, he opened the convocation with "We Shall Overcome."

"A Lincoln Portrait" (by Copland), with John Chamberlain, narrator, and "Music of Mourning," by Hindemith, with Arthur Lewis, Viola soloist, were performed by the Baltimore Chamber Orchestra conducted by Elliott Galkin.

Daniel Abrams, pianist, was soloist in the Mendelssohn Concert No. 1.

In recognition of the current concern for peace, this year's convocation was entitled "Convocation Concert for Peace."

The program was under the direction of Dr. Galkin, chairman of the department of music at Goucher.

Earlier in the season, Mr. Eubanks was co-soloist with James Reynolds, tenor, in the local premiere of Shostokovitch's "Song of the Forest" sung at an evening Goucher concert.

Performing were the Goucher-Hopkins Symphony Orchestra and a 100-voice choir from Hopkins University, Goucher College, Morgan College Chorale, Baltimore Community College and the Boys Choir of Immaculate Heart of Mary Church.

Under the able directorship of Daniel Abrams, the cantata-like composition was given with heroic grandeur and artistic regard for its haunting lyric melodies that depicted a future "when war was over."

The soloists performed with eloquent distinction and, with the well disciplined chorus, built the work to a thrilling climax.

The concert opened with "The Harmony of Morning" by the avant garde American composer, Elliott Carter.

Skillfully written for female voices, its neo-classic style was given a richly descriptive interpretation by the Goucher College Glee Club and Goucher-Hopkins Symphony Orchestra, with George Woodhead on the podium.

The lovely tone color of the singers was matched to fine effect by the texture of the orchestra.

A near capacity audience filled the Kraushaar Auditorium for both concerts.

A concert by Hugh O'Meagher, member of Peabody Conservatory faculty harpsichordist, with an ensemble of flute, strings and a continuo (accompanying harpsichord), afforded a rare opportunity of hearing chamber music by J. S. Bach.

Comprising the program were: Conata for flute and harpsichord; a three-part (Troieme Concert for harpsichord, flute and cello by Rameau and the Bach Concerto in D for Harpsichord, continuo and strings.

Mr. O'Meagher arranged the concert in the tradition of Bach, who wrote much of his chamber music while chapel master at the palace of Prince Leopold.

There he had the opportunity of performing his secular works with his students. Unlike the modern concerto, with a featured soloist, the Bach work represented the great master's genius in writing the complex, intricate counterpoint (themes against theme), with the solo harpsichord carrying the obligato, while the continuo applied the harmonic basis.

The interplay and detail of the themes were admirably clear, with the pure, silvery tone of the harpsichord, blending with the timbre of the strings. In the Adagio (slow) movement an especially rewarding solo for cello was played by Paul Warner.

Mr. O'Meagher's brilliant performance of the finale Allegro (fast) brought the concerto to a sparkling conclusion.

His skillful handling of the variety of tone effects (thru the pedal) on the harpsichord admirably marched the timbre of the flute, which was artistically played by Paula Hatcher.

Rameau's concert was a delightful example of the elegant, flowery writing of the French Baroque, with the composer's favorite imitation of the tamborine, done by the harpsichord.

Interest in the concert was heightened by Mr. O'Meagher's enlightening description of the instrument and the compositions.

He is a graduate of Peabody and studied in France with the famous Wanda Landowska.

Following the concert, which was one of the noon series in the concert hall at Peabody, a number of the audience gathered on the stage to examine the harpsichord, which was made to the soloists specifications in New England.

The O'Meagher "Concerto Grosso" for harpsichord, flute and strings, will be played early in the fall.

Freedom House opens here on Druid Hill Ave.

Freedom House at 1234 Druid Hill Ave., the old NAACP office, officially opened its doors June 2.

Neighborhood leaders met with officials of the Police Department and the Liquor Board to launch their "sale Block Campaign."

William Perkins, chairman of the campaign, presented. Mr. Perkins is president of the Oxford Improvement Asso.

Mrs. Betty S. Graves of the United Baptist Missionary Convention of Maryland is secretary.

In the words of Dr. Lillie M. Jackson who sent out a call for the meeting in response for appeals for help which have poured in to her from various neighborhoods "We can not sit still and let the hoodlums run us out of our neighborhoods. We must stop the attack, burglary and other crimes in our own blocks, but we must work together in a united effort for neighborhood safety."

Major William A. Harris Community Relations director and Lt. James Watkins of STOP, Tactical Squad, worked with neighborhood representatives to plan techniques of cooperation to prevent crimes and to apprehend offenders speedily.

Joseph Van Cullen, executive director of the Liquor Board, pledged the cooperation of his agency in closing taverns which are for sale and pushing of dope.

Mrs. Esther Middleton was appointed chairman of the complaint committee.

The next meeting of Freedom House will be held June 9 at 7:30 p.m. when Policewoman Mercedes Rankin of Community Relations will demonstrate measures citizens can use in protecting their homes from burglaries and explain the new block Mothers Program of the Police Department.

WE NEED MEN...

and we want them to be diplomats, child psychologists, traffic control experts, human relations specialists, and, in a pinch be able to dry a tear or two, deliver a baby, save a life, referee a basketball game, and whenever there is any "extra time,' tell some small boy how great it is to be a Police Officer.

in return for being "all things to all men," the METROPOLITAN POLICE DEPARTMENT of Washington, D.C., offers you the sense of being part of your community and the awareness that you are doing something to make that community the kind of a place we all want to live in. A sometimes frustrating but ALWAY rewarding career, with a starting salary of $8,000 a year.

Of course the Metropolitan Police Department offers the usual benefits as well:

ADVANCEMENT OPPORTUNITIES — MEDICAL CARE — FAMILY BENEFITS — EXCELLENT RETIREMENT — EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES — VACATION AND HOLIDAYS — FULL PAY DURING TRAINING.
