HUMPHREYS
. . . serving families all over the world for more than a century with the finest in home remedies.
"Famous the world over since 1854."
HUMPHREYS HOME REMEDIES

Change for truants

"can only be hurt."

"When this child is released," he says, "he will not have any greater motivation to attend school than when he went in."

He suggests that to combat these "old, ineffective remedies" we must "concentrate our best thought and energy on what root problems behind truancy are and what can be done to cope with them."

Judge Hammerman outlines 13 principal causes of truancy. Among them are the student's inability to achieve and keep up; a lack of material essentials for school such as clothing and shoes.

Also many students suffer from chronic diseases and illnesses which are improperly treated and the instability of the family and home contributes.

* * *

He asserts that many families do not recognize the importance of school and others, particularly the poor, feel that no amount of schooling is going to improve their chances in life.

He also mentions the fear that many parents have for the safety of their children on the streets and in the schools, and the undetected and untreated emotional disturbances of many school-age children.

* * *

Overcrowding ranks high in Judge Hammerman's opinion on truancy causes and he emphasizes the decline of adult authority.

Finally he pointed out that "truants are rarely caught — the impunity with which most can play hooky" contributes.

Judge Hammerman points to the thousands of "youths in our city with no education, no skills, no work or study habits, no prospects — thousands on their relentless way to an empty, unfulfilled adulthood.

* * *

To combat this condition Judge Hammerman prescribes a radical, different approach.

He says, "I feel that it is the responsibility of the Department of Education to devote greater and more imaginative resources to this end."

He recommends special education and counseling centers in the community, more trained people from other than school related disciplines, street academies, more versatile curricula and more specialists to work on a one to one basis.

* * *

The cost for this can be made up from the savings accrued from not having to pay the $6,500 needed to keep one truant in a training school for one year.

Finally Judge Hammerman declares, "If a child does not respond to our intensive program (which will take time to develop fully) then we shall not punish him by sending him away but will have to admit our own failure.
