time when white and colored persons would visit each other in their homes and share with one another."

She bemoaned the fact "that it doesn't happen anymore."

Mrs. Gross remembers all of the significant events and people of her day.

She first came to Baltimore at the age of 14 and states, "I went to cook for one of the second white families to live in Roland Park. Lord knows, I can cook as good now as I could then."

Mrs. Gross kept house and shopped downtown until as recently as three years ago.

Her daughter, Mrs. Violet Green, 59, said that her mother loves to walk through Lexington Market, and the Big Valu store at Mondawmin.

Mrs. Gross is a spry lady, religious and sentimental. Her recommendation for living as long as she has is: "Eat three good meals a day, and take care of the body."

She claims vaseline is "as good as a dose of medicine" and she has used the preparation for colds and for aches and pains in the back of her head, since a fall she had thirty years ago.

"At age seventy I had to come home and keep house," she continued. "I would keep house and talk to the neighbors while my daughter worked."

As proud as any artist, Mrs. Gross went to a large box in the old-fashioned, comfortable bedroom and pulled out row after row of beautifully crocheted spreads and tablecoths.

Without the aid of glasses in her 102 years, Mrs. Gross makes numerous spreads to be sold.

Since she is not able to get out and sell them, she asks that anyone interested in buying to contact her at her home.

In her younger years Mrs. Gross was struck by lightning twice, and has had typhoid fever without noticable after effects.

To keep her face wrinkle-free, "I just wash my face daily and use vaseline."

"I went to parties but never danced in all my days. Afro-bushes are nice, but they are nothing new," she insists.

"Men had sideburns and whiskers so long that you couldn't see their ears in my day."

On August 6, 1968, Mrs. Gross celebrated her 100th birthday, with many relatives and friends gathering.

She belongs to Enon Baptist Church.

She was born in Stoney Creek, Sussex County, Va.

She had very little schooling, and does little reading, but when being read to, if anyone makes a mistake, she corrects them immediately.

She was married to Edward Glasper, who died in 1922. Later, she married Louis Gross who died about fifteen years ago.

Mrs. Gross had eight children of whom two are living. She has two grandchildren and eleven great-grandchildren. For a number of years the family lived in the 2300 block Division St.
