time when white and colored persons would visit each other in their homes and share with one another."

She bemoaned the fact "that it doesn't happen anymore."

Mrs. Gross remembers all of the significant events and people of her day.

She first came to Baltimore at the age of 14 and states, "I went to cook for one of the second white families to live in Roland Park. Lord knows, I can cook as good now as I could then."

Mrs. Gross kept house and shopped downtown until as recently as three years ago.

Her daughter, Mrs. Violet Green, 59, said that her mother loves to walk through Lexington Market, and the Big Valu store at Mondawmin.

Mrs. Gross is a spry lady, religious and sentimental. Her recommendation for living as long as she has is: "Eat three good meals a day, and take care of the body."

She claims vaseline is "as good as a dose of medicine" and she has used the preparation for colds and for aches and pains in the back of her head, since a fall she had thirty years ago.

"At age seventy I had to come home and keep house," she continued. "I would keep house and talk to the neighbors, while my daughter worked."

As proud as any artist, Mrs. Gross went to a large box in the old-fashioned, comfortable bedroom and pulled out row after row of beautifully crocheted spreads and tablecoths.

Without the aid of glasses in her 102 years, Mrs. Gross makes numerous spreads to be sold.

Since she is not able to get out and sell them, she asks that anyone interested in buying to contact her at her home.

In her younger years Mrs. Gross was struck by lightning twice, and has had typhoid fever without noticable after effects.

To keep her face wrinkle-free "I just wash my face daily and use vaseline."

"I went to parties but never danced in all my days. Afro-bushes are nice, but they are nothing new," she insists.

"Men had sideburns and whiskers so long that you couldn't see their ears in my day."

On August 6, 1968, Mrs. Gross celebrated her 100th birthday, with many relatives and friends gathering.

She belongs to Ezion Baptist Church.

She was born in Stoney Creek, Sussex County, Va.

She had very little schooling, and does little reading, but when being read to, if anyone makes a mistake, she corrects them immediately.

She was married to Edward Glasper, who died in 1922. Later, she married Louis Gross who died about fifteen years ago.

Mrs. Gross had eight children of whom two are living. She has two grandchildren and eleven great grandchildren. For a number of years the family lived in the 2300 block Division St.

said, however, Agnew was expressing his "personal view" and had not discussed the matter with Nixon or any members of the White House staff.

"Rhodes was selected for the commission to have a wide range of views — a diversity of views — on the commission," Ziegler said.

"We have no plans to change the make up of the commission."

In Cambridge, Mass., Rhodes, the first black junior fellow in Harvard history, said he had no intention of resigning unless requested to do so by Nixon.

"I must presume that the President appointed me to this commission because of my strong views, including the fact that I do not necessarily agree with much of administration policy," he said in a statement.

"I must presume that the President does not want a whitewash," he said. "I must also presume that he wants us to find the facts, unpleasant through there may be to the vice president."

Rhodes said he had received no request from Agnew to resign.

Terry scores hole-in-one

ANNAPOLIS, Md., — Vernon Terry, long ranked as one of the top players in Maryland golf circles, fired a hole in one here Sunday at the Eisenhower Golf Club.

Playing in a party that included Al Green, the course pro, Terry hit a six iron from the tee of the 150-yard fifth hole. The ball took a perfect arc, landed short of the green and rolled into the cup.

Terry, a past president of the Monumental Golf Club of Baltimore, then went on to play out the 18 holes in a one-under-par 70.

It marked the first ace to be scored on the year-old Eisenhower layout.

home about 2:30 a.m. on June 10.

Reports filed by the arresting officers state that Alan Henson, 22, 1200 block Kitmore Rd., sustained several bullet wounds and was admitted to Union Memorial Hospital with bullet wounds of the left wrist; three bullet wounds of the chest and another bullet wound of the abdomen near the spine.

Police reports also quote Mr. Henson as saying he had gone to Mr. Campbell's home "to see him about some money he owed me" and while there an argument ensued and he was shot by Mr. Campbell.

Arresting Officers Robert B. Winterstein and Philip C. Johnson state when they answered the police radio call at the Winston Ave. residence shortly after 2 a.m., Mr. Campbell met them at the door, and handed over two guns.

The officers quote Mr. Campbell as saying, "Here are the guns. I shot him six times."

The police officers also report Campbell led them to a first floor rear room where they found Mr. Henson on the floor bleeding.

They also report that later in the day on June 10 at the hospital and before Mr. Henson "passed out," he was able to tell them that he went to the Campbell house in company with a man named "Eldridge."

The officers state that Mr. Henson failed to identify "Eldridge" and they were unable to obtain further information before he became unconscious.

• • •

Mr. Campbell, son of a retired Army captain who is now employed at Bethlehem Steel in the Community Relations Division, was charged with assault with intent to murder and lodged at Baltimore City Jail June 10.

Attorneys of the law firm where he was employed as a law clerk, filed habeas corpus proceedings in Baltimore City Court to obtain his release on bail.

In papers they placed before Judge Cole, the defense attorneys state that young Campbell plans to attend Baltimore Community College in September.

They also told the court that he is a Calvert Hall High School graduate and was on summer vacation from a California Junior College when he became involved in the June 10 incident.

Joseph P. McCurdy Jr., defense attorney, stated that Mr. Campbell was arrested "after an alteration in his home which resulted in injury of an intruder who had come to collect a debt."
