given "everything they asked for."

He inserted if he had committed any crime he would have hidden the records and added, "I didn't have to give them anything but I did."

Ellis also said all the persons who had asked him to obtain funds for supposedly needy friends had suddenly disappeared and failed to come to his aid.

Omitting any names at this point, he nevertheless identified one of the persons as "one of four city councilmen."

He said: "Now when the time comes, here I stand condemned as the greatest criminal in Baltimore and none of the people who could have helped me has come forward."

Mr. Ellis named as an exception the Rev. Vernon Dobson of the Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance who did testify in May in his behalf and told how Ellis gave funds to a person he had referred.

The Rev. Mr. Dobson also testified in May that the Ministerial Alliance never intended for the city to have control of the Riot Fund which it had turned over to Mr. Ellis to administer.

Continuing his explanation Thursday, Mr. Ellis asserted that someone probably said that Ellis was one of the black city officials "who could be done in" and Pressman in his campaign to destroy black officials and Daniel Paul in his efforts "to find something wrong with CAA, followed their purposes."

The thrust of Defense Attorney Williams during the trial was that the Riot Fund was never legally under the city's jurisdiction and therefore Ellis could not be accused of any crime by the city.

On Thursday, Mr. Williams asked that Mr. Ellis be accorded mercy as a person who did not deserve to be thrown aside as a criminal but as one who could rehabilitate himself to be come a useful citizen.

Despite the twenty 30-minute Ellis speech gave of his case and his passionate plea, Judge Grady read from a typewritten opinion he had prepared before he came into court. Copies were available for the press.

The jurist noted that Ellis was defended by experienced attorneys and it appeared that all relevant evidence had been presented to the jury by both the prosecution and the defense.

Judge Grady also took note that Ellis denied vigorously any wrong-doing from the beginning "right down to today."

However, he said in addition to the usual considerations which determine appropriate penalty to be imposed in a criminal case, "this case involves some additional factors which the court has to take into account."

Judge Grady then concluded the disposition opinion by saying:

"First, the funds which the jury found the defendant had misappropriated to his own use were funds which were contributed voluntarily by interested citizens of this community which they intended to be used for the relief of victims of the disorders which occurred in the City of Baltimore in April, 1968.

"Secondly, the defendant, a man with an outstanding educational background who had attained positions of trust in various fields, was entrusted with a high position in the City government. It was as an incident of his position these funds came under his control.

"In arriving at a proper disposition the court realizes that the fact of these convictions will in all likelihood disqualify the defendant from ever again occupying any governmental position and also undoubtedly will severely limit the type of employment which will be available to him in the future.

"After having carefully weighed all of the circumstances of this case, the court has concluded that the proper disposition is as follows:

"Under each count of each indictment, namely 8450 through 8453 and 8455 through 8465, the sentence is a term of two years imprisonment under the jurisdiction of the Department of Correctional Services with all sentences on all counts and in all indictments to run concurrently."

the race in November as an independent.

On Wednesday Powell was nowhere to be found in the black subcity which he had represented in the House since 1945 — but largely on an absentee basis in recent years

He disappeared in the early morning hours after evicting from his campaign headquarters a white reporter who asked him, "Do you think you have won?"

"How stupid can you be?" replied the confident Powell who had been returned to office election after election without more than a casual swipe at campaigning.

This year he didn't bother at all, convinced that the voters who had always "kept the faith" would remain faithful to Big Daddy, as he liked to be called.

Typically, Powell didn't even bother with the niceties of election protocol. He just slipped away somewhere in the night in his powder blue pants and onyx pink shirt without conceding to 40-year-old Rangel.

Not many people questioned later in the day in Harlem's stifling streets seemed to care.

"He really didn't give me the impression he wanted his seat again," said Walter Green, a bus driver on 125th Street.

"He's old enough to get out. Let a young person get in," said a white-haired woman outside the Dunbar Billiard Academy on Seventh Avenue.

But George Smalls, who runs a real estate office under the Alfred Isaacs Democratic Club at 145th Street said he was broken hearted.

"Harlem without Adam," he lamanented. "I don't believe it's true."

Powell wasn't at his office at the Abyssinian Baptist Church, largest Baptist congregation in the country. It was locked and the phone rang unanswered. If he had a home in Harlem, no one has known the address for years.

Bimini, one of the least of the Bahamian Isles, was his retreat.

"Adam was unwilling to represent his community either in Washington or Harlem," said Rangel. "That is why he lost the primary."

Powell began his slow downstairs slide in 1960 with a casual remark in a television interview identifying a Harlem widow as a "bag woman" (graft collector) for crooked police. The libel suit which followed brought a verdict of $180,000 against Powell, payment of which he long evaded and has not yet completed.

A trial for income tax evasion ended with a hung jury. Subsequent civil suits resulted in a $27,000 settlement of back taxes. Powell was financially strapped in 1967 when he was judged

By authority of Ralph C. Wheatley

See what we got for sniffing around Canada.

We wanted a whiskey that didn't smell the way an American whiskey smells.

We wanted a whiskey with a lighter taste.

And we wanted a whiskey that looked lighter.

So up in Canada we sniffed out a blend of expensive whiskies with a lighter taste, a lighter color and a lighter aroma. Black Velvet.

If you have a nose for a good thing, discover Canada's Black Velvet. It's worth the extra penny.

De Leaver new State Trooper

The 64th Recruit Class of the Maryland State Police Academy, consisting of fifty-nine members, graduated at State Police Headquarters, Pikesville on Tuesday, June 23rd. The principal address was made by the Honorable Blair Lee III, secretary of state.

Mr. Lee welcomed the graduates into the law enforcement profession and emphasized that it was a profession that they could enter with a great deal of pride.

He further reminded them of the difficult tasks they face in law enforcement, bringing to their attention the civil disorders and protests which are so much in existence in our country today.

The graduates were assured that even though some people may call them unpleasant names that the majority wholly support them and deeply appreciate their devotion.

During the ceremony, secretary of state, Blair Lee and Captain Charles A. Kirkpatrick presented the diplomas and commendations.

Among those receiving diplomas in the 64th Recruit Class was Trooper Douglas De Leaver, son of Mr. and Mrs. James De Leaver of Baltimore.

Graduated from Paul L. Dunbar Senior High School. Served in the U. S. Army. —Trooper DeLeaver will be assigned to the Waldorf Ba assigned to the Waldorf Barracks. signed to the Waldorf Barrack.

Parran Mitchell vows 'return to democracy'

Congressional Candidate Parren J. Mitchell unveiled a plan "to restore grassroots democracy" at today's opening of the headquarters of the Edmondson Village Volunteers for Parren Mitchell.

The former CAA director lavished praise on the Edmondson Village community leaders who had organized the volunteer group.

"Only this kind of citizen-level support," he said, "can elect congressmen who will really be—representatives, instead of absentee rulers."

But he expressed concern that even a Congressman elected through such a community effort could "lose touch with his constituents."

Though he made no direct reference to his opponent, incumbent Samuel N. Friedel, Mr. Mitchell noted that "this district has a good example of that right now."

He then outlined his proposal "to breathe new life into representative government:"

congressman should come back to his district frequently, and hold regular open-meetings to which any citizen can come to speak his mind.

"I will come back; I will hold such meetings; I will, not be an absentee congressman.

"The people who attend those meetings would choose a standing Constituent Caucus, to consult with the representative and keep him informed of the popular will between meetings.

"The people would then have a continual opportunity to make their opinions known, as a counterweight to the lure of the power centers in the Capital," he declared.

The Morgan State professor expressed his hope that the meeting-caucus system could bring the nation back towards "the ideal of democracy," which, he said, would be "a system in which each citizen plays a part in decision-making."
