Baltimore And All That Jazz

ARCHIE MANGRAM JR.

Lately there has been an increasing number of jazz musicians that have migrated to the commercial, and lucrative, worlds of cinema and television.

They are either writing the scores for these industries or playing them or both. The latest entry to be heard on a movie soundtrack is the jazz organist, Jimmie Smith.

On a recent TV presentation, "Where The Spies Are," an English flick, Jimmie was a dominant voice on the soundtrack. With the soul approach to the organ that Jimmie has, you know it swings.

It is astonishing how well-suited jazz improvisation is when integrated into the score for motion pictures. Let us hope that the trend continues.

The Left Bank Jazz Society presented Jaki Byard, last Sunday. Jaki plays piano and tenor sax. We, unfortunately, missed the first two sets and therefore didn't get a chance o hear him on tenor.

The Jaki Byard Quartet has a nice, swinging versatile sound. However, as a whole, there is lacking that exciting quality.

The feeling here was that this group could have sounded better.

Pete Yellin, who was on alto sax and flute, played some technically fantastic alto solos that rarely get over.

There was some redeeming value in that he played some beautiful flute solos. Especially on "There Will Never Be Another You."

Jaki's piano, however, made the trip to the Famous Ballroom worthwhile. Watching him play, one gets the feeling that he is attacking the keyboard.

His style seem to be a synthesis of several, from the bluesy "downhome" to the block-chord harmonic extensions reminiscent of Dave Brubek.

An added attraction was Robert Williams (the boy wonder) sitting in with the group. Robert is the disgustingly young (12 years old) tenor man (man?) with the Jr. Ultratones, an exceptionally talented young (average age 13) Baltimore group.

For an extra added attraction, Ruby Glover sang, as only she can. She did one heck of a job with "Take The A Train."

The session sponsored by Those Guys last Saturday featured Jimmie Wells and Rick Johnson.

Jimmie, as everyone knows, plays Vibes. He plays them so well that it would take an entire column to discuss him. One will be forthcoming.

Rick Johnson is a drummer's drummer. He is a driving combo drummer as well as an outstanding soloist. Need I say more? Mickey Fields was on tenor sax. He has to be about the most talented tenorman in town.

Rounding out the quintet was George Maxwell on piano doing an excellent job, and George Maxwell on bass.

Incidentially the jazz sessions are held in the Windjammer Lounge of the James Brown Motor Inn.

There seems to be quite a pool of vocal talentin Baltimore. Had a chance to hear two more female jazz vocalists this weekend.

Liz Figeroe appeal with the Arnold Sterling Trio and is really saying something. Caught her at The Lexington West.

The Monday night session at Steve's Cocktail Lounge brought us in contact with still another female vocalist that we were unaware of.

She is Marlene Ross, a young singer who is loaded with talent. This young lady bears watching as she has not even reached her potential yet. She is currently appearing at the Bear's Den.

A final note: Lennie Moore's is now holding its own Jazz Session on Saturday afternoons.

Of course this is bonus for all you jazz lovers. Now there are two sessions on Saturdays. Nothing like competition to improve the product.

Significantly, there are fewer black candidates at this point than had been expected, though more are certain to file Monday.

William H. Murphy, prominent veteran attorney who is bidding for one of the four Municipal Court judgeship posts, is among those who will file Monday.

Mr. Murphy will be challenging the "sitting judges" practice that has been followed generally at the polls for years, until two years ago when Governor Agnew Judges Joseph C. Howard and Paul D. Dorf backed the establishment and won.

There are 15 sitting judges running as a team, including the black community's Judges Harry A. Cole and Robert B. Watts, of the Supreme Bench, and John R. Hargrove, of Municipal Court.

The 4th District's Sen. Verda F. Welcome is expected to file for reelection Monday, and bring in a slate of candidates from her 4th District Democratic Organization.

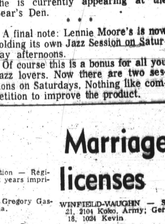
Sen. Clarence M. Mitchell 3rd has already filed for reelection, representing the district's rival Metro Democratic Club.

Two new faces in the 4th District's Senate race are Dennis Crosby, Baltimore Teachers Union representative, and Frank M. Conaway, insurance company executive.

Filing for the House of Representatives in the 4th District as of Thursday press time were incumbents Italah Dixon Jr. and Calvin A. Douglass.

Lloyd Randolph, chief Supervisor of Elections clerk and another of the district's House incumbents, will file Monday.

Others who have filed for



GEORGE J. HELINSKI

Deputy State's Attorney serving in Moylan's place until new State's Attorney is named by Supreme Bench the House in this district are Miss Hildagardeis Boswell, Shelton Stewart, Clifton M. Collins, Ben Freeman and Johnny Fair.

The 5th District had few black candidates at press time. Leonard Briscoe, lawyer, was first to file for a senate seat.

Clarence W. Blount, Dunbar High School principal and chairman of the Community Action Commission, has also filed for the Senate.

Running with him for the House is Pinkney A. Howard, a vocational school instructor.

Over in the 3rd District where there are less black residents than the 4th and 5th, there are two of the race's candidates running for the House of Delegates.

They are John J. Douglass, a school teacher, and Tucker R. Dearing, veteran attorney, both running as a team.

The 2nd District is shaping up to present perhaps one of the sharpest primary battle grounds for the primary, with several black candidates.
