Youths with drugs fare badly abroad

UPI

There's nothing like travel to broaden the mind and nothing like a little hash or pot to turn the journey into a real bad trip. As hundreds of young Americans and others are discovering, the rest of the world may be worth seeing, but not through the bars of a prison for drug offenders.

They suffer the filth and stench of the notorous "jail of sands" in Beirut, packed 60 to a cell only 20 feet by 30 feet with hole, in the floor for a communal toilet. They labor in the factories of other penal institutions in Spain, Russia or Greece counting the long hard days till freedom

Some are philosophical and resigned.

Some are resentful and rebellious. Some are clean and intelligent. Some are dirty and dumb.

But there are common denominators that link this army of unfortunates, a bedraggled brigade as symbolic of the permissive society as mom's apple pie was of its elders.

They are overwhelmingly young. They are all either ushers or pushers of illegal drugs. They are all losers in a duel of wits with law enforcement and customs authroities in which they they were easily outmatched. They mostly have no regrets — except at being confined.

"They're not hard to catch," said a Lebanese so you can even smell the stuff."

Ronald Lee Emmons, 22, a Chicago blark, was a philosophy student at Illinois University before they decided to travel around the world.

He was arrested with two Italians carrying five pounds of hash. The judicial process took 13 months and it was not until Feb. 5 this year that he was sentenced to five years.

A former member of his university basketball team, Emmons is provided with books by U.S. consular officials.

His mother appealed to her senator and to the Turkish umbassador in Washington but nothing helped against Turkey's determination to make known that her narcotics laws are among the toughest in the world.

Warnings of the heavy penalties are posted in most western embassie and consulates.

Last year, the Turk- ish-American Association hired a former peace corps worker who spoke Turkish and knew the country to help in the drive to protect unwary visitors.

He spent most of the sumfer warning tourists and hippie and is believed to have contributed to the smaller number of arrests.

One turkish intellectual, recently released from prison, said life was very difficult with three people often sleeping in space only big nough for one.

Those who have served time for drug offenses in Russia said they found it a case of "too much cold, too little ood" but eatable.

Americans recently released declined to talk — there seems to be a feeling that the less said the better for other prisoners, or shut your moth and serve your sentence.

The two-month seminar is sponsored by the Institute of International Education New York University and will carry nine graduate credits.

He has done further study at the University of Maryland and is enrolled in the graduate program at Salisbury State College.

Mr. Johnson has been employed in Wicomico County as an instructor in English since 1963, first at Salisbury High School and now at James M. Bennett Senior High.

He was one of a group of teachers who prepared supplementary teaching materials on ethnic minorities for the use of Wicomico teachers in a workshop last summer.

It is contemplated that he will serve as a special resource person, along with other teaching duties upon his return to Wicomico County in the fall.

Mr. Johnson's participation in the African Seminar has been made possible in part by a grant of $1,500.00 from Wye Institute for which he was designated by Loyd A. Mahaffey, superintendent of schools of Wicomico County.

The son of David and Essie Johnson of Philadelphia, Mr. Johnson is married to the former Miss Mae Delois Page of Burgaw, North Carolina; they have one daughter, Etah.

Annual outing of real estate brokers held

Last Sunday was an ideal summer day for the 31st annual outing of the Washington Real Estate Brokers Association which was held at the Glenwood Country Club in West Friendship, Md.

Over 250 brokers, their staffs, and invited guests attended. The activities were varied — tennis, baseball, volley ball, horseshoes and croquet. The small fry monopolized the well-equipped playground.

Over 60 teen-agers went horseback riding and a group, under the direction of Mrs. Mildred Brown, had a pinochle and whist tournament for which prizes were awarded. Other groups also played cards.

A combo of four young musicians, under the leadership of Craig T. Thompson, son of the retiring president of the association rendered lively music throughout the afternoon.

The Frederick W. Berens Company provided a bar from which tap beer and other refreshing beverages were dispensed. Larry Nelson of the Berens Company was the jovial and capable bartender.

The buffet dinner consisted of fried and barbecued chicken, crab cakes, corn on the cob, baked beans, potato salad, tossed salad, rolls, iced tea and sheet cake. The servings were generous.

After dinner the Vi-Jon Basketball team under its Captain John D. Thompson, competed against the John P. Murchison, Jr's. team under its Captain, John P. Murchison Jr. The winners were the Murchison Team. Each team received a case of Schultz Beer from the association for competing. The winners also received a beautiful, ornate, twenty inch trophy, donated by the U.S. Steel Company.

The asociation presented the retiring president, John D. Thompson, a beautiful silver tray as a memento and in appreciation for a successful term in office.

Credit goes to Mrs. Josephine G. Jones, chairman of the outing committee for the past 18 years, for the success and enjoyment of those who have attended. She had as her usual assistant, Noah P. Moore, newly elected vice president of the association.

The new president, Rudolph A. Taylor, treasurer, Mrs. Minnie L. Banks, parliamentarian, Thomas J. Lloyd, and board members, Simon Douglas, John D. Thompson, Sammel C. Reynolds and Mrs. Anne W. Toliver of the National Association of Real Estate Brokers mingled freely among the guests.

Goodies come from the garden's end

Why is it that the final crop of tomatoes, string beans, green peppers, zucchini squash and other vegetables from your own gardens always seem to taste better than any other?

Perhaps it's because you know it will be next spring again before you get that very special just-picked flavor characteristic of vegetables that go from the soil straight to the cooking pot.

* * *

A wonderful vegetable combination to make with the garden's tag ends is Ratatouille. This is a magnificient Provencal ragout of vegetables . . . usually eggplant, zucchini squash, onions, tomatoes, seasoned with olives and garlic and slowly simmered to blend flavors.

It has all the color and gusty aromatic flavor typical of southern France's cuisine. The built-in seasoning of Spain's lovely pimiento-stuffed olives lends just the right tang to the combination.

* * *

Another vegetable recipe with the flavor and flair of southern French cooking is Scalloped Potatoes Provencal. Thinly sliced potatoes are baked with tomatoes, garlic, anchovies and pimiento-stuffed olives.

It's quite different from the usually scalloped potatoes with milk and butter but equally delicious. Both make delicious dishes for National Spanish Green Olive Week (September 4-13th) celebrations.

Make Ratatouille with one medium eggplant, peeled and cut in 3-inch strips, 1-inch thick; two medium zucchini, cut in ½-inch slices, two teaspoons salt, one-half cup olive oil, two medium yellow onions, thinly sliced, two medium green peppers, thinly sliced, two cloves garlic, minced; three medium firm tomatoes, peeled and cut in strips, one cup sliced pimiento-stuffed olives, one-fourth cup chopped parsley and one-fourth teaspoon pepper.

* * *

Combine eggplant, zucchini and 1 teaspoon salt; let stand 30 minutes. Drain and dry with paper towel. In a large skillet or heavy saucepan, saute eggplant strips then zucchini slices in ¼ cup hot oil about 1 minute on each side, or until lightly browned. Remove and set aside pieces as they brown.

In same skillet, cook onions and peppers in remaining oil until tender; stir in garlic. Place tomato strips on top; cook covered 5 minutes. Gently stir in eggplant, zucchini, olives, parsley, salt and pepper.

Simmer covered 20 minutes; uncover and cook 5 minutes longer, basting frequently with juices from bottom of pan. Serve at once or chill and serve cold.

Scalloped Potatoes Provencal requires two cups sliced onions, one-fourth cup olive oil, two cloves garlic, crushed, six anchovy fillets, mashed, one-fourth teaspoon each: basil, thyme, one-eighth teaspoon pepper, one-half cup pimiento-stuffed olives, sliced; one and one-half pounds tomatoes, peeled, halved and thinly sliced; two pounds potatoes, pared and cut in ⅛-inch thick slices (about 6 cups) and one-fourth cup grated parmesan cheese.

Cook onion in oil in large skillet until tender (do not brown). Remove from heat. Stir in garlic, anchovies, basil, thyme and pepper. Add olives and tomatoes; mix lightly. Layer tomato mixture and sliced potatoes in a shallow 2-quart baking dish, beginning and ending with tomato mixture.

Sprinkle with cheese. Cover loosely and bake in 400 degree (hot) oven 1 hour. Uncover and continue baking 20 minutes longer, or until potatoes are very tender.

Use oil from anchovies if desired.
