READY TO WORK — John Mackey of the Baltimore Colts and president of the National Football League Players Association, confers with NFLPA general counsel Alan Miller while awaiting developments in the players' squabble with NFL owners. Mackey and Miller reiterated that veterans on all the teams in pro football are solidly behind demands for better retirement fund benefits, but said they are ready to "work around the clock" in negotiating with the owners.

Spare The Rod

PITTSBURGH — A plan to gradually phase out paddling of students in the city schools was approved 8-5 this week by the Pittsburgh Board of Public Education.

No students would be paddled after September, 1973, the board said.

Day Care Center open

The Day Care Board of the Model Cities Agency has opened a free day care center in the Enon Baptist Church at the corner of Edmondson Avenue and Schroeder St.

This center is opened to serve children ages 3-6.

The day care center will be opened to the parents who are presently working, seeking employment, or in a training program and also live in the southwest Baltimore Model Cities Neighborhood ... bounded by Paca, Monroe, Mulberry and Bush Sts.

The United States Youth Games will be held in New York, Aug. 20-23.

By the way...

by Joe Black

Violence is rampant at many schools today! During the past year, there were fights and brawls following many of the football games. The basketball season saw more of the same. Stabbings and fighting are becoming so prevalent, there is now talk of curtailing interscholastic athletic competition entirely.

I would like to remind parents, athletes and students alike, that varsity athletic programs are NOT an obligatory part of a school's educational program. The inter-school sports program is a privilege granted by state and local Boards of Education. And you don't have to be a mental giant to recognize that black youth has benefited greatly from these athletic programs. Athletics has been one of the few areas where black men have been able to break the barrier and gain the admiration and respect of a sports minded America. It's been a door-opener to scholarships and education...an uncommon opportunity to earn big money and win national acclaim. And very often a stepping stone to jobs with futures unrelated to sports.

Today, when millions of blacks are marching and protesting to gain a greater share of wealth and respect for the black community, it's a damned shame that we allow a handful of unthinking radicals to smash this fine avenue of opportunity.

To those relatively few trouble-makers I say: search your souls. Ask yourselves whether your actions depict a people who are black and proud...or just plain, flat-out ignorant?

Royals' Piniella learns Salmon plays sometime

KANSAS CITY (UPI) — Standing near the batting cage before Wednesday night's game Chico Salmon was giving the Kansas City Royals' Lou Piniella the razz.

Good-Naturedly, Piniella finally had enough. Turning to the Orioles's utility infielder, Piniella said, "Listen, I know I've only been in this league two years, but I've never seen you play, Chico. What do you do for a living?"

Piniella and the rest of the Royals found out in the 13th inning when Salmon pinched hit for Pete Richert with two outs and Dave Johnson on third base.

Salmon missed a high fast ball from reliever Ted Abernathy, then startled everyone in the ball park by dropping a hard bunt between first and second base. First baseman Bob Oliver fielded the ball, but Salmon outran the ball and Abernathy to first base as Johnson scored the winning run for a 4-3 victory.

"We told him to watch the third baseman," chortled manager Earl Weaver, "but (Billy) Sorrell was right on top of him. He surprised everybody by going the other way. He laid down a helluva bunt."

Salmon was delighted with his surprise maneuver.

"I swung at the first pitch before he even released it, so I decided the bunt was my only defense," Chico said. "I looked down and the third baseman was looking down my throat."

When he bunted the ball, Salmon said, "I knew Abernathy wouldn't catch it because it was by him. After that, it was just a race between him and me."

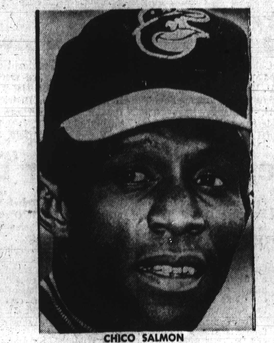
Overhearing the conversation, Salmon's lockermate, Andy Etchebarren, chimed in. "And you knew that old guy wasn't about to outrun you, didn't you, Chico?"

Salmon just beamed.

The victory was Baltimore's 19th straight over Kansas City.



CHICO SALMON
Bird gets the last laugh

Birdseed..

ATTENDANCE BOOM: The Orioles' home attendance jumped appreciably over past two weeks. The Birds played three dates each against Detroit, New York and Minnesota from July 3 thru 18, and drew 217,081 thru the turnstiles (the ticket sale in this stretch was 224,481) to pull within 19,000 admissions of last year's figure at the same point, 55 dates.

The Birds averaged 24,120 per date in these three series against three of the league's top clubs. The largest single crowd was 46,169 for last Friday's "tee shirt" night game against the Twins . . . This was the biggest regular season turnout in two years at Memorial Stadium; since 45,729 showed up for a July 17th, 1968 game against Detroit at a time when the Birds were making a run at the first place Tigers. Ironically, that was also a "tee shirt" night.

To reach a million in the remaining 30 dates, the Birds must average something close to 12,500 turnstile clicks or a ticket sale of roughly 10,750, well below the current averages of 13,912 and 15,058 respectively.

"MERIWELLS": Ten of the 23 games the Orioles played between June 22nd and July 17th (last Friday) were decided during the winning team's final turn at bat . . . Of these, the Birds won four, but lost six. This doesn't include two all-star games played in this span, both of which were concluded as the result of the other club's last-inning heroics: The International League All Stars beat the Birds with a ninth-inning rally in Norfolk on July 6th, and, of course, the American League team with 7 Orioles on the squad lost to the National last week in the 12th inning.

THE TWINS: After this weekend, the Orioles and Twins will not see each other again unless both clubs make it to the Championship playoffs more than two months hence. . .

The Twins currently hold a 5-3 edge in the sason series. Last year the Birds won eight of 12 regular season games against Minnesota, then sweet them three straight in the playoffs. . .

The two principle factors in the Twins' succes s against Baltimore this year are Harmon Killebrew and Ron Perranoski . . . Killebrew is hitting .375 (12-for-32) vs. the Birds with two doubles, five homers and 11 rbi . . . Perranoski, the league's leading reliefer, has contributed two wins and three saves . . . In other words he has had a big part in every Minnesota win. . . In all he's pitches 11 one third innings, has not allowed a run and has yield just 6 hits to Baltimore batters . . . Killebrew, incidentally, has hit 39 home runs against the O's in his carerr, more than any other opponent, past or present . . . He is also credited with the longest "measured" home run in Memorial Stadium, a 471 foot blast over the center field hedge off Mill Papas back in 1964.

POWELL: When Boog played in the second leheader in Chicago July 19, it marked the 52nd consecutive game for the All-Star first baseman in 1970 . . . Powell is the only Oriole to have participated in all the cub's games this year.
