How Voting Rights Act Changed Southern Politics

By TOM GREENE

ATLANTA (UPI) — Five years ago President Lyndon B. Johnson signed into law the Voting Rights Act of 1965, described by his attorney general, Ramsey Clark, as a "bold experiment in democracy."

The experiment has produced dramatic results.

The number of blacks registered to vote in the six southern states fully covered by the act has nearly doubled. Five years ago 72 blacks held elective positions in the South. The figure today is 540.

White politicians who defended segregation in the 1950s headed into the 1970s voicing concern about poverty. Many who failed to change with the times learned that the black electorate, while usually not big enough to elect black candidates, often produced victories for more moderate whites.

* * *

Charles Evers, the black man elected a year ago as mayor of Fayette, Miss., termed the act "the greatest deterrent to racial discrimination we have ever had."

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Mauldin of Selma, Ala., the first two persons to register under the act, are convinced black people are far better off now than five years ago.

"People have got more rights, more priveleges, than they have ever had before," said Mauldin. "They look more like citizens now."

There now are 10,000 black voters in the Selma area, and Mauldin figures this is why the once dusty streets in Selma's black neighborhoods are being paved. "If it keeps up, we're going to have all these streets blacktopped."

* * *

George Andrews, a 69-year-old conservative democrat who has represented a South Alabama District in Congress since 1942, doesn't share the Mauldins' liking for the act.

"This has been the most punitive, vindictive piece of legislation ever passed in this country," Andrews said. "I've actually seen people voting who couldn't read. We have to permit morons to vote, and that diminishes the intelligence electorate."

Andrews acknowledged that the act is shifting the balance of political power in many areas of the south. "I'm the last of the long-term Congressmen from my district," he observed.

The voting rights act was applied to states in which less than 50 per cent of the voting age population registered to vote. It specifically covered Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, Virginia, portions of North Carolina, and the only non-Southern state, Alaska.

The law suspended state literacy tests for prospective voters, empowered the Justice Department to send federal registrars to foot-dragging counties and extended civil and criminal protection to persons seeking to register.

The most significant registration tool was the suspension of literacy tests. Illiterate black had no difficulty passing the tests in many sections of the south but in other areas blacks with doctorate degrees were rejected.

In Mississippi, a voter had to be able to do more than read and write. He had to interpret to the satisfaction of the county registrar, any section of the state constitution put before him. In some counties, nearly every black failed.

* * *

The act has changed political life in every state it covers.

In the late 1950s, Ernest Hollings ran for governor of South Carolina. The only way to get elected in those days was to speak up for segregation. Hollings spoke up and was elected.

A decade later he ran for the U.S. Senate. He never mentioned segregation. While his Republican opponent allied himself with Strom Thurmond, Hollings openly sought black as well as white support.

Most whites voted for the Republican, but Hollins got 99 per cent of the black vote — swollen by the voting Rights Act — and that gave him a narrow victory.

Hollings later toured black shanties in his state with an NAACP leader and reported to the U.S. Senate something that no southern senator had ever publicly stated — that hunger and malnutrition existed in his region and something should be done about it.

Sen. Herman Talmadge, who a decade earlier praised segregation at white citizens council rallies, followed Hollings' lead and toured back neighborhoods in Georgia, urging that more be done for the impoverished of both races.

Sen. William Spong soon did the same in Virginia.

Still, blacks continue to have virtually no chance of being elected to statewide offices in the south. In no state they are outnumpriw more than a third of the electorate. In most states they are outnumbered four or five times by whites.

In fact, while black registration has increased by nearly two million across the south since 1965, the number of white voters has grown by nearly four million.

* * *

Black registration in the six southern states wholly covered by the act has gone from 31 per cent of the voting-age population in 1956 to nearly 60 per cent. But black registration still is far short of the 80 per cent registration of whites.

More numerous have been triumphs scored on the local level, such as the election of Charles Evers and an all-black board of aldermen at Fayette and the selection of Lucius Amerson in Macon County, Ala., as his state's first black sheriff.

In Greene County, Ala., where black registration increased eight-fold and blacks now hold a majority, they are controlling the county commission and the school board.

Landlords are charged with housing violations

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Justice Department last week accused the managers of 150 buildings with 21,000 apartments in New York City of violation the Fair Housing Act by discriminating against black people.

Attorney General John N. Mitchell announced the civil rights suit was filed in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn. He said it was the largest housing case ever brought by the government and the first in New York City.

Named in the suit were Samuel J. Lefrak who manages and controls apartment buildings in Brooklyn and Queens; Life Realty, Inc., which rents only apartments managed by Lefrak; Mrs. Rheba Gelman, vice-president of Life Realty, and Assistant Atty. The government could not list the addresses of all the apartments in its complaint. Cuccia.

For the past seven months, the department said, it tried to obtain voluntary compliance with the 1968 Fair Housing act but reported "this attempt has been unsuccessful" because Lefrak and his associates denied the government access to pertinent documents and records.

"At least with respect to the buildings in Brooklyn managed by the Lefrak Organization and rented through Life Realty," the government said, "they practiced discrimination "because of race, color, and national origin in the rental of apartments."

The Lefrak organization has offices at 97-77 Queens Blvd., Forest Hills in the Queens section of the city. plaints, a spokesman said, because of being denied access to records.

Lefrak na dhis agents were accused of "deliberately channelling black apparately channelling black applicants to selected apartment buildings while channelling whites only to other buildings."

They aalso were accused of making dwellings unavailable to persons because of race, color and national origin, and of representing that apartments were not available when in fact they were.

The government sought a court order prohibiting the defendants from violating aany part of the Fair Housing Act and requiring them to take whatever steps may be necessary to correct the effects of past discrimination.

The largest housing suit filed prior to the Lefrak action was recently concluded in a consent order with major apartment owners in Los Angeles.

U.S. Air Show Set For Dulles

WASHINGTON — Dulles International Airport, in Northern Virginia about 25 miles from Washington, has been chosen as the site of the first United States International Air Show in June, 1972.

The transportation Department said the event, similar to the Paris Air Show, will be designed to promote business for the domestic aerospace industry. More than one million visitors are expected to view more than 500 planned exhibits.

DRIVING SAFETY. Certain types of road paving become extremely slippery during the first few minutes of a rainfall, according to the Tire Industry Safety Council. The rain mixes with oil and gasoline to form a thin film between a car's tires and the road. After about 30 minutes, the film is washed away by the rain.

Peace Corps volunteers leave Philly bound for Barbados

LINCOLN UNIVERSITY, Pa. — Sixty-eight Peace Corps volunteers in Lincoln University's eighth training program last Saturday flew from Philadelphia International Airport to Bridgetown, Barbados.

The group which ranges in age from 21 to 67 has been in Philadelphia doing practice teaching from July 20 to July 30. Prior to that, they were on the Lincoln campus near Oxford, Pa., from July 11 to 18.

While in Barbados they will take part in education workshops, language training and practice teaching until Aug. 28. They will depart for assignment sites from Bridgetown, Aug. 30.

During their two-year assignments the PCV's will engage in teaching in school systems or on the vocational level working with adults, imparting such skills as farming and economic development.

"The PCT's come from all walks of life," noted Robert N. Gardner, Lincoln University professor of Physical Education and also Peace Corps Project Director.

"In the group are: teachers, librarians, TV editors, medical technologists, physical therapists secretaries, cooks, a ship deckhand, laborers, auto mechanics, a fire control aide, nurses, a cox cabmet maker, laboratory technicians, truck drivers, waitresses, janitors, a book repairer, a carpenter, a TV cameraman and a manufacturer f curtains and drapes and his wife," Gardner said.

He noted that 57 or the 68 PCV's are college gradustes.

* * *

"There are 17 husband and wife teams in the group, most of them in their twenties although there are several in their fifties and one husband and wife who are 67 and 66.

There is one couple among the group who are in their thirties and are taking their three children, (two boys aged 10 and 8 and one girl, 6) with them to their assignment areas in the Eastern Caribbean islands," Gardner said.

He also noted that the PCV's come from 20 states: Michigan, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Arizona, Wisconsin, California, New Jersey, Texas, Oregon, Illinois, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Ohio, New York, Colorado, Connecticut, and Washington.

Gardner will accompany the group to the training site in Bridgetown, the University of West Indies' Institute of Education.
