Medina Temple gives $5,000 to rec center

Medina Temple is contributing $5,000 to the Lafayette Community Center building fund and presented an initial payment of $2,000 during a ceremony at the center.

The presentation was made by Noble Wardell Young, chairman of the Temple's Charity Committee, to Vernon Sheffey, the center's executive director.

Noble Lloyd Cure, Illustrious Potentate, said Medina Temple has been making contributions to local and state wide charitable organizations for many years.

In recent years, Provident Hospital, Eastside Recreational Center, Planned Parenthood, Hunter Home for Blind, AFRO's Miss Santa Calus and Children's Hospital have been recipients of Temple grants.

The Lafayette Square Community Center will be built at a cost of $600,000 with $375,000 provided by the federal government and the balance $325,000 provided through public contributions.

The center, in existence for 15 years, serves a community of almost 30,000 in the Harlem Park area.

Public and private agencies already committed to pool their efforts include the Department of Social Services, the Health Department, American Cancer Society, the Sitae Employment Service, the Department of Housing and Community Development, the Legal Aid Bureau, Red Cross and Travelers Aid.

The center is a Community Chest Agnecy and the only accredited settlement house in Maryland.

The new building will have 30,000 square feet for its operation and will be located at Lafayette Ave. and Gilmor St.

In its present crowded quarters at Fremont Ave. and Lanvale St., staff members are feeding more than 150 neighborhood children daily.

The new guilding will provide expanded health and social services, job opportunity cornselling, tutorial programs and other activities for adults and the aged as well as youngsters.

A fulltime day care center for children will be provided.

Others at the presentation and cere mony were: Noble John N. Thornton, Chief Rabban, Noble Lloyd Cure, Illustrious Potentate, Noble Clarence Wycoff, Imp. Potentate and Grandmaster of the most Worshinful Hiram Grand Lodge A.F.A.M. Noble Franklin Parker, co-chairman of the Charity Committee, and Noble Columbis McNeil, who was then Assistant Chief Rabban but has since been elected Potentate.

HEW grants $10 million to college for handicapped

HEW's Office of Education announced recently the award of 118 grants totaling $10 million under a new program to help disadvantaged or physically handicapped young people achieve success in college.

The new program, called Special Services for Disadvantaged Students in Institutions of Higher Education, was authorized by an amendment to the Higher Education Act of 1965.

Grantees are 146 colleges and universities, some of them working cooperatively under a single grant.

This is the third of a set of programs of service to disadvantaged students administered by the Division of Student Special Services in the Office's Bureau of Higher Education.

The other two are the 5-year-old Talent Search program and the Upward Bound program, begun six years ago. Awards of $5 million for Talent Search and $28.3 million for Upward Bound also were announced today. The awards are for the fiscal year that began July 1.

"Upward Bound and Talent Search have already demonstrated their great worth to the disadvantaged young people they serve," said Peter P. Muirhead, Associate Commissioner for Higher Education.

"Now, the addition of Special Services gives us a trio of programs that will produce both immediate and long-range benefits not only for these young people but for our entire society."

Talent Search locates bright but poor and unmotivated young people and steers them toward college or vocational school. Upward Bound helps high school students of the same kind prepare for college.

The new program, Special Services, lends a helping hand to both physical and academically handicapped students after they are in college.

Disadvantaged young people from all racial groups and all parts of the country will receive such special services as counseling and tutoring. Curriculums modified to meet their needs and special summer sessions also may be offered.

Physically handicapped young people may receive these services as well as personal help. For example, a reader may be furnished for a blind student or a typist for an amputee.

Under the Talent Search program, colleges, groups of colleges and public or private non-profit organizations, in a position to persuasive way, seek out disadvantaged young people, encourage them to finish high school, and help them plan and prepare for college or vocational training.

The young people reached are in city ghettos or rural depressed areas, on Indian reservations, or in Mexican-American barrios. Talent Search programs also publicize information on educational opportunities, including Federally supported programs of loans, grants, and jobs for college or vocational students.

For the fiscal year beginning July 1, the $5 million was awarded for 82 Talent Search programs.

Upward Bound is a college-based pre-college program to assist high school students handicapped by poverty and cultural and educational deficiencies. The projects have two phases.

The first offers a 6 to 8-week intensive residential summer educational program at the college. The second is a follow-up program in which going made in the summer are consolidated through after-school tutoring and weekend sessions.

The $28.3 million for Upward Bound was awarded to 297 institutions. Students found by Talent Search and those helped through Upward Bound will be afforded the benefits of the Special Services program in participating colleges, if these services are needed.

Plan expansion of process in releasing parolees

Plans are underway for parole agents to be placed in seven Division of Correction institutions, so that the process of releasing paroled offenders back to the community might be expanded, according to Joseph G. Cannon, commissioner of correction.

In making the announcement last week, the commissioner expressed his unqualified support of the proposal put forth by Ralph S. Falconer, acting director for the Division of Parole and Probation saying:

"We have felt for sometime that parole representatives working with staff personnel in our institutions could provide a real service to the offender who is about to be released on parole.

"This type of parole liaison representative is needed more now than ever before, especially since the passage of House Bill 880-70, which specifies that any offender sentenced after July 1, shall be released under mandatory parole provisions."

* * *

Messrs. Falconer and Cannon pointed out, however, that the parole representative program in the institutions is not designed to increase the number of offenders who will appear before the Board of Parole for a parole hearing.

Rather the program is intended to reach earlier those people scheduled to appear before the Board of Parole, and to expand the services now provided to those persons coming up for parole review or who have been approved for release by the Board of Parole.

"There is a lot of ground work to be carried out in developing a parole program for a man about to be released," Mr. Falconer explained. "By placing a parole representative in an institution, we should be able to begin developing a parole program earlier and in much more detail."

Mr. Falconer said it is anticipated that within the next month a parole officer will be working within each of the following institutions:

The Maryland Penitentiary, the Maryland Reception, Diagnostic and Classification Center; the Maryland House of Correction; the Maryland Correctional Training Center; the Maryland Correctional Institution; the Maryland Correctional Camp Center; and the correctional camps at Sykesville, Hughesville and Poplar Hill.

Fashion notes

By LILLIAN WIGGINS

Hat designers and hair stylist have united . . . to create the wig boom. Famous names in both fields have personal wig collections in most department stores across the country.

Years ago only society women could afford the luxury of a wig. Wigs then were human hair, terribly expensive, and not very practical. Besides keeping her own hair in shape, she now had a wig to manage, too.

Today, pre-curled wigs answer hair problems for most women. They're pretty . . . and practical (most synthetic wigs are priced from $25-$45). Woman can . . . and do . . . own more than one wig Think of the new found freedom. Women can change their entire personality by simply changing the style or color of their hair, in the time it takes to don a wig. It's marvelous.

Humble Oil Company recently contributed an unlimited grant of $2,000 to the Geology Department at Virginia State College as part of Humble's educational foundation, which supports oil-related academic efforts.
