A long, long, road for little Monique

In 1964 Reginald Coleman's wife gave birth to a little girl, Mr. Coleman said, "The doctors tried to break the news to me slowly. They told me there were just minor complications."

The infant had been born prematurely and when she stopped breathing twice during the first night of her life her father knew there would be trouble ahead.

He learned the worst when Monique was two days old. She had been born with multiple birth defects . . . Water on the brain (hydrocephalus), open spine (meningo myelocele) and club feet.

There was a chance that she might not live.

Mr. Coleman, an employee in data processing in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, went to the National Library of Medicine to learn as much as possible about birth defects and why this tragedy had struck his daughter.

He found out that, if there was to be any hope for Monique, she had to be taken to a large medical center where skilled surgeons could use the latest treatment methods to care for her.

She was too small to be moved for the first few weeks but when her weight reached 5 pounds she was taken to Johns Hopkins Hospital in a portable incubator.

At the March of Dimes Birth Defects Treatment Center (there is one in D.C. at Children's Hospital), Monique was placed in the hands of a medical team specifically trained to treat children born with problems like hers. Within a short time, she underwent eighteen operations.

The years have been difficult ones, but Mr. Coleman said that he never gave up hope and always had complete faith in the doctors at the Center. He was assured that someday Monique would walk.

The worst time for him was seeing Monique after her first operation because she looked so terrible that he didn't think she would live. Then an incredible thing happened.

Mr. Coleman returned to the hospital two days later because he simply couldn't face returning sooner and found a happy, smiling child.

He knew then that she would be all right.

Today, it looks as if Monique will be more than just "all right".

She is an alert little girl who entered kindergarten this year and she is walking with the aid of braces.

And according to Monique's doctor, Mr. Coleman's hope that his daughter will be able to make her own way in life will be realized.

This story points out very clearly what your contribution as a military or Federal employee can do. Your generous support is greatly appreciated.

Miss Jamesetta Holliman wed to Dr. Onyeledo of Nigeria

with Lula Makay

Miss Jamesetta Vashti Holliman, concert pianist, and Dr. Godwin-Collins Onyeledo, member of the faculty of Fletcher College of Law and Diplomacy in Medford, Mass., were married in the sanctuary of the Christ United Methodist Church, last Saturday. The bride, a Julliard graduate is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Holliman of this city. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Lucy Onyenbol of Owerri Province, Nigeria, and the late Thomas C. Onyeledo. He holds two Ph.D. degrees from the Sobonne, Paris, France, one in law and politics and the second in sociology.

The Rev. Irvin Lockerman performed the ceremony. Wedding music was by an instrumental ensemble from the Peabody Conservatory of Music, which performed a work composed by James Blake especially for the occasion. Mrs. Joyce Solonitro of Jamaica was soloist. Maurice Murphy was organist.

Miss Holliman wore an ivory gown designed with silk organza and Alencon lace bodice which featured a Mandarin collar. The sheer Bishop sleeves were appliqued with Alencon lace, which also rimmed the detachable chapel length train. Her veil was held by a pearl-trimmed Alencon lace petal hat.

Miss Ada Lomax of New Haven, Conn., cousin of the bride, was maid of honor. Miss Joan Smith and Miss Irma Adams were bridesmaids. Their gowns were of aqua chiffon with Scotch linen trim, worn with pouf veils of four tiers attached to combs.

Earl Williams, attorney, of New Haven, Conn. was best man. Askey Sanders and Leon Stephens were ushers. Mrs. Mary Lou Sanders, Mrs. Juanita Cannon and Mrs. Modestino Cox were assisting hostesses at the reception which followed.

Among out-of-town guests were:

Prof. and Mrs. Gregory Henderson of West Medford, Mass., Messrs. and Mesdames Lance Phillips and John Deitz of Brookhaven, L.I., N.Y., Mr. and Mrs. Benjamine Demps of N.Y., Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Price of New York City.

'Pinkie' case dropped

William Bobby Fowler won reversal of his conviction in the "Pinkie Murder Case in a decision of the Maryland Court of Appeals last month.

He was accused of assaulting and beating 17-year-old Linda Keller, a Church Home and Hospital "Pinkie" to death in the hospital basement in November, 1966.

The court ordered the reversal on grounds that Fowler did not have an attorney present when a confession was taken.

On Thursday the Maryland Attorney General's office announced the state will drop the case.

The local States Attorney's office said however several cases of robbery remaining against Fowler will be brought to trial.

Fowler is now serving a 20-year term on a rape conviction in another unrelated case.

Wedding Anniversary recalls by-gone era

By ELIZABETH M. OLIVER

One of Baltimore's most widely known couples, Mr. and Mrs. Walther (Adele Diggs) Carr, 2040 Druid Hill Ave., celebrated their 58th wedding anniversary quietly on Sept. 10 with "no fanfare" as Mrs. Carr says.

The Carrs have one living son, Robert Carr Sr. of Philadelphia, six grandchildren and six great great-children. A grandson, Walter Robert Carr Jr. a noted artist, was featured in the Sept. 5 AFRO.

As one of Baltimore's oldest families, the Diggs family history reads like the history of the town itself.

Mrs. Carr's father was the late Josiah Diggs who owned extensive property and the old Dunbar Theatre in East Baltimore.

The Dunbar opened in 191[illegible] and closed in 1958 after 44 years continuous operation. The Josiah Diggs Charity Club established by the family over 60 years ago in still helping needy persons.

A society belle of the '20's, Mrs. Carr has lived all her life in the Druid Hill Ave. home her father purchased and was graduated from Douglass High School.

In that day, Druid Hill Ave. was "Sugar Hill!" Many solid old families still reside there.

Mr. Carr, a native of a prominent old Easton, Md. Shore family, met the popular Miss Diggs at their home in 1912 when his sister, Mrs. Sarah Carr Webb, became a bride at the residence.

In a shortmie, the Carr's wedding took place in the same living room, a quiet affair but with all the sedate and modest grandeur for which the Diggses were known and the Carrs are still known.

The home is still resplendant with priceless antiques in the family over 100 years.

The Carrs had three sons, James who died March 11 this year; Ewell, who died at the age of 18 and Robert, a Philadelphia business man who survives.

The Dunbar theatre was built from five little old East Baltimore houses. Mrs. Carr recalls.

When Mrs. Carr's father, Mr. Diggs, retired, her husband took over as the Dunbar Theatre manager and was succeeded in 1947 by their son James.

The theatre at 619 Central Ave. was closed in January, 1958 when it was purchased by the city of Baltimore for a school. The Josiah Diggs Elementary School bears the name of the founder.

When the last picture was shown and the Dunbar vacated to be torn down, the event was mourned as "the passing of an era" in that the old movie house was the only ever owned by black persons in those days when black citizens were barred from white theatres.

Much of the theatre's history spanned the silent films era when Tom Mix, Clara Bow and Buck Jones were stars.

Mr. and Mrs. Carr and their fourth generation members of the family have carried on the charity work begun when she was a child by her parents.

Mrs. Carr recalls how her father used the Dunbar Theatre as a center for distributing Christmas baskets for the needy, "hundreds of them every year."

She states, "We always looked after the needy before breakfast and then my father would say, 'Now I can go home and enjoy Christmas.'"

The Josiah Diggs Charity Club was organized by the Carrs in memory of Mr. Diggs who died in 1936.

The Carr family, mostly through Mrs. Carr, has been a "pillar" at Bethel AME Church for over 50 years. She has been an active member and official half a century.

Looking back to social customs of years ago, Mrs. Carr recalls that a bride of the early 1900's was expected to keep a solid home for her husband and rear a family.

Housekeeping as an art seems to have "passed from the American scene" today, she remarks and adds perhaps the dying down of the home fires has left today's youth in need of wholesome guidance.

Today when citizens go to church, weddings and funerals informally minds hats and gloves seem "strange," Mrs. Carr states, adding in her own vivacious manner, "but times to change."

The Carr's home is still however the center of their family gatherings on holidays when grands and great grandchildren are assembled and learn the old traditions.

Emeal Wilson, Sr. of 1004 Walnut Ave., Baltimore, Maryland representing Pres.-A-1 Janitorial Services, Inc. was one of 65 minority businessmen and civic leaders who attended the Eastern Minority Businessmen's Invitational Conference August 31 in Warrenton, Virginia.
