supplies left at Mme. Nguyen's villa were later returned.

Mrs. Rander, a mental health associate at Baltimore City Hospitals, hasn't stopped hoping for an early release but now she says, "I don't feel it will be anytime before the war is over and that's very discouraging."

Mrs. Rander, Lysa and Donna have already written their monthly letters and again sent a package filled with candy, gum, cigarettes, medical supplies and pictures. They can only hope that S/Sgt. Rander will receive them.

Lysa, Mrs. Rander's daughter by a previous marriage, decided to undertake a project of her own this year. A student at Merritt Point Elementary School in Dundalk, she spent the last two weeks explaining the situation in Vietnam to her classmates and encouraging them to write letters to the president of the Republic of North Vietnam.

The students wrote 150 letters which Mrs. Rander took to Washington where they will be combined with 100,000 tons of mail from across the nation, asking the Hanoi headquarters to take more interest in the American prisoners.

In Lysa's Christmas letter to her father, she explained what she hoped the letters would accomplish. She wrote, "We're trying to bring the men home."

Four-year-old Donna Page was only 18 months old when her father left. Her mother explained, "She's too young to really understand, but she's beginning to talk more and more about her father."

Mrs. Rander and her daughters attend the Fort Holabird Post Chapel where they pray for S/Sgt. Rander's safe return home.

Mrs. Rander, who says "I have to always think of what's best for the children," is taking them to visit their grandparents in New York during the holidays.

They hope to celebrate next Christmas with S/Sgt. Rander, giving him all the gifts they couldn't give him during the past four years.

Kids delegates to youth confab

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Youngsters had their say as delegates to the White House Conference on Children here last week.

One of the most vocal and most active was 16-year-old Kenneth Robinson, a student at Pearl High School in Nashville, Tenn.

Kenneth served as vice chairman of the Forum on "Children Who Are Handicapped."

The chairman was Mrs. Winthrop Rockefeller, board member of the Joint Commission of Mental Health of Children, National Association for Retarded Children and National Association for Mental Health, Little Rock, Ark.

Kenneth developed a very personal interest in mentally retarded children when at the age of 11, he became associated with the mongoloid son of his family's physician.

He said that responding to the warmth and appeal of this youngster "I developed a wish to seek community organizations through which I could help the mentally retarded. Even at that age, I was impressed with the great need."

He explained he hopes an advocate for children at least will come out of this White House Conference, especially an advocate of the handicapped. "I hope that the delegates will go back to their resident organizations with a new perspective about ameloriating the problems of our handicapped children," he said.

Also busy at the Conference were five Washington school children who were selected to cover the affair as junior press photographers, with cameras provided by the Polaroid Company and which they were allowed to keep.

The children were given no specific assignments, but had access to all conference workshops, forums and exhibit areas. They were free to report with their instant-picture cameras on each event as they saw it. Their work is on display in the Exhibit Hall at the Sheraton Park Hotel.

The pupils were selected by Mrs. Lucinda Sullivan, a science resource teacher in the D.C. school system.

29 Gls die in week's Viet action

SAIGON (UPI) — The U.S. command said last week 29 Americans were killed in the Indochina war during the week ending Dec. 12 and 337 were wounded. It was the second consecutive week in which non-combat deaths outnumbered those on the battlefield.

The latest casualty report again failed to list 38 Americans abroad two crashed C123 transport planes since last month. One went down Nov. 27 and the other Nov. 29.

The new report brought to 44,144 the number of Americans killed in combat in the war since Jan. 1, 1961. The death toll the previous week was 27.

Military sources said 32 Americans died from illness, accidents and other noncombat causes.

While the death toll remained relatively low, the number of U.S. wounded was the highest since the 431 in the last week in October.

Wounded for the war now totals 292,917.

The U.S. command reported its current figure of Gls listed as missing, captured or interned as 1,630, a reduction of four from the previous week.

We can't hide from the fact that brotherhood these days is not being "crowned from sea to shining sea." A better word might be "flattened." And that word "brotherhood" is going to continue to have less and less meaning unless all of us stop "tsk, tsk, tsking" and start doing something tangible and constructive.

I'm referring to the great hordes of black and white citizens who daily battle our national problems by uttering such profound statements as: "My God, what is this country coming to?" Or..."This country will be better off once we get rid of those irresponsible, long-haired kooks and black militants."

No doubt this is a serious and perplexing time for all Americans, black and white. But it's not going to get better until we all start getting involved. Begin by re-appraising your own feelings and prejudices about people and things. Stop hating people simply because they're black, white, yellow or red. Look at them as individuals with the same rights to opportunity and happiness as you have.

With the polarization of the races rapidly approaching the dangerous stage, the philosophy of "I got mine, you get yours," must go. If it doesn't, nothing else that happens will matter.

CAB, new CCB awareness unit

By Dr. SIDNEY KOBRE

Concerned about the problems the city faces, the faculty of the Community College of Baltimore is organizing a new group called "CAB"—Concerned about Baltimore.

The purpose of the organization is to demonstrate that the college is deeply interested in the city's welfare and its progress, and to make tangible contributions to its advancement.

President Harry Bard, who has served as the spur for CAB, said in an interview for the AFRO-AMERICAN, that the college faculty can do valuable research on the city's problems, providing an overall view of where the city stands, what progress has been made, and what are the practical solutions to the issues the city faces.

The faculty, by means of active, voluntary participation in the city's life, also can be of aid.

"We feel that we must meet the challenges presented by the changing city and that we have responsibilities toward it" Dr. Bard declared. "Ours is a community educational institution, and our focus is on community life. What affects the city affects the college; our entire future depends on the progress the municipality makes."

Instead of showing despair about Baltimore and abdicating our responsibilities, we should exhibit hope and should tackle the job in a positive fashion, he declared emphatically.

President Bard pointed out that at the college are many instructors, assistant professors, associate professors and professors with expertise in their subjects. Many of the faculty members live in the city and some in the counties, but all have a stake in the city, he said.

He added that the faculty wants the city to look at the Community College of Baltimore as an institution that is concerned about the city and has a staff with skills and understandings which can be made use of in the solution of concrete problems, such as those in taxation and finance, politics, mental hygiene, housing, environmental pollution and human relations.

The educator asserted that CAB holds promise of awakening general citizen participation and in bringing about a resurgence of the hope that Baltimore will solve its serious urban problems.

ROBERT C. MARSHALL

Councilman Robert C. Marshall (4th D.), chairman of the City Council's Public Transporation Committee, heads a delegation of six councilman to San Francisco Monday, on a three-day study of the transportation program there in relation to how the proposals and activated lines may be of benefit to the Baltimore metropolitan area. The 2nd District's Councilman Robert L. Douglass is among the six councilmembers making the study trip.

TJD still hedging on School Board nominees

Mayor Thomas J. D'Alesandro 3rd is still noncommital on his pending appointments to Baltimore's School Board.

The mayor said Wednesday he would send his nominations to the City Council on Jan. 11 when it reconvenes after the holiday recess, but when asked for some indication of whom he had in mind he stated flatly:

"I have no further comment."

Up for reappointment are Samuel T. Daniels, one of the four black members of the nine-seat board, and Nicholas (boy) Margione a recent appointment of the mayor to fill an unexpired term.

A third nomination up is one to succeed Philip Macht, board member who has resigned.

Mayor D'Alesandro has been under considerable pressure in recent months to name a fifth black member to the School Board, to give it some balance in relation to the majority of black students in the city's public schools.

Proponents of this argument hold, among other things, that a majority black member School Board would be far more sensitive to the problems and needs of the schools in terms of administration and necessary community relationship.

The mayor, however, has chosen to move with deliberate slowness in this area, giving little or no hint of his intentions.

His most recent nomination of Mr. Mangione proved to be somewhat of a shocking setback to the black community, when that person appeared at a School Board meeting and referred to black male members as "boys" and to the lone veteran black lady member as "Mrs. Boy."

The mayor has been hardpressed to explain the Mangione appointment, as the man is in his family. — MAX JOHNSON

Last Saturday officers of the narcotics and vice squads raided 4402 Fernhill Ave. and arrested two persons on charges of possession of lottery slips.

Thomas Nixon and his wife, who reside on the first floor of the two frame dwelling, were charged on the lottery possession while their 18-year-old son was charged with possession of marijuana.

Police say the youth had what was described as "some marijuana seeds."

The raid was conducted at 6 a.m and officers decline to state whether or not Narcotic Squad detectives had a bigger catch in mind than that which resulted from the raid.

Comprehensive health head

William McC. Hiscock, Director of Comprehensive Health Planning at the Regional Planning Council, has been named President-Elect of the Association of Areawide Health Planning Agencies.

The association, composed of almost 100 areawide health agencies, promotes comprehensive health planning and provides member agencies with liaison with federal and other national health organizations.

A black Santa Claus is alive and well

For the second Christmas season Sam Gladney, owner of a variety grocery store at the corner of Monroe and Lanvale Sts. has given an abundant number of Christmas baskets to needy families in the area of his business.

Last year Mr. Gladney with the assistance of Captain Dennis Mello of the Western District obtained the names of needy families and saw that 500 of these families were provided with baskets brimming with Christmas toys, candies and other goodies.

This Christmas Mr. Gladney is contributing 300 baskets to other needy families in the same area.

During the past year Mr. Gladney gave a list of names to police officers in the area who assist in distributing the baskets on Christmas Eve. He also took many baskets to the homes of the families himself.

Mr. Gladney has been the proud, black owner of his business since 1968.

He feels that Christmas is not really Christmas unless he is helping others in his own area have a happier Holiday Season which they otherwise would not have.

This is but one example of a black man helping others in his community.
