Former Buc execs admit 'lean years' caused by ignoring tan stars of 30's

By SAM LACY
AFRO Sports Editor

PITTSBURGH — The Pirates might not have experienced a 33-year drought between National League pennants had not organized baseball been so slow to open its eyes to reality.

Although he refrained from a positive commitment on the subject, Bill Benswanger, former president of the Pirates, admitted Wednesday evening that "there were some very fine (colored) ball players around here in the thirties."

Benswanger was the president and principal stockholder of the Pirates during the period when two outstanding colored clubs were operating in the area.

THE LATE Cum Posey had the fabulous Homestead Grays and Gus Greenlee owned the great Pittsburgh Crawfords.

Between them they controlled at one time or another most of the biggest names in the annals of tan baseball—Josh Gibson, Buck Leonard, Satchel Paige, Vic Harris, Smokey Joe Williams, Sam Bankhead, Oscar Charleston, Jud Washington, Cool Papa Bell, Jake Stevens, and School-boy Taylor, Dickie Seay, to recall a few.

"I have a vague recollection of some of them. Bens" was pressed cautiously to the AFRO query. "I remember there were some fine players in their ranks, but I didn't know too much of them personally."

BENSWANGER and his predecessor, Barney Dreyfuss, were known to be cool toward proposal to hire tan athletes in the lean years following the Pirates' demise in 1927.

But there were other former Pittsburgh executives who had no objection to being put on record concerning the merits of the city's old time tan stars.

Pie Traynor, for example. The great Pirate third baseman was managing the Bues during the late thirties. Said he:

"I'm pretty sure we could have used some of those guys back there. Take Josh Gibson, for instance. A couple fellows like Gibson and Leonard could make from the difference between our fourth place finish and the pennant.

"The Pirates finished seventh in 1938, when we won 86 games. Paige or Williams pitching for that club could have meant 100 wins."

BILLY HERMAN, since a coach with the Dodgers and Milwaukee Braves, declared:

"The Pirates wouldn't have been seventh when I managed 'em in 1947, if we could have had a Bankhead or Bell on our side."

Fred Haney, manager here before going to Milwaukee to win two straight pennants, also remembered the brilliance of the old Grays and Crawfords.

"I saw all of them at one time or another," vouched Haney, currently radio sports-caster.

"There were a flock of truly great boys in that crowd. Some of them were a little raw, but Cool Papa Bell, every one of them had tremendous natural abili-

Chest aids Boy Scouts

Services worth more than $1,000,000 are freely given each year by volunteers who serve as Scout leaders in the Baltimore Area Council, a Community Chest agency supported by the public's contributions to the United Appeal.

Figured at $1 an hour, a total of 10,212 adults spent an average of 133 hours each last year working with Scouts, taking training courses and participating in campaign activities.

The United Appeal, which began on October 3, is seeking to raise $3,109,557 to support the 1961 activities of the Boy Scouts and 43 other Community Chest member agencies as well as 21 Red Cross services.

Last year, the Scouts received an allocation of $247,500 from the Chest to organize new Cub packs, Scout troops and Explorer units, to recruit and train leaders and to provide stimulating programs.

of a passed ball by Burgess to add a third run in the fourth.

PITTSBURGH CAME back in the bottom of the fourth to collect three consecutive blows — by Gino Cimoli, Burgess and Don Hoak. But they could manage only one run as Turley retired the next three hitters in order, one of them Gene Baker pinch-hitting for Friend.

New York broke the game wide open in the sixth. Howard opened with a triple off the right-center wall and scored on a first pitch single by Richardson. Before it was over, Elston led his second hit of the inning, a run producing single to left.

The Yanks pushed across seven runs on seven hits, a base on balls and an error by the usually dependable Dick Groat. Thereafter, as far as the outcome was concerned, it was only a matter of settling on the final score; what with the AL champions now ahead by a comfortable margin.

The Bues grabbed the opener by skipping into a quick lead and standing off a bid by the Bombers.

Starting as though they meant to demoralize the Yanks with their speed, the Pirates had two stolen bases by the time their fourth batter had completed his turn at the plate.

Bill Virdon walked, stole second and went to third as the befuddled Yanks failed to cover Berra's throw. Dick Groat then doubled to right to score Virdon and tallied himself as Skinner singled.

Bob stole second while Dick Stuart was being retired, then faced home on Bob Clemente's blow up the middle. The three runs erased a first inning homer belted by the Yanks' Roger Maris into the first row of the upper right stands.

Singles by Maris and Bill Skowron got New York a run in the top of the fourth, but again it was wiped out in the Pittsburgh half of the frame. This time it was an unexpected homer by Bill Mazeroski with Don Hoak aboard that widened the gap to 5-2.

Mazeroski's single followed by Virdon's two-bagger off the right screen gave the Buccaneers another marker and a 6-2 bulge.
