Labor study tells of race progress

A study, made by the Labor Department and released Wednesday at a special White House press conference, reflects a record of progress of which the United States can point to with "some degree of satisfaction."

The results of the study, The Economic Progress of Negroes in the United States, lips, a widow, resides at 423 Watty Court, McCulloh Homes.

was released by Mrs. Anne Wheaton, Presidential associate press secretary. The release mentioned the notable development made in recent years in education, type of work, income, housing and other measurable areas. It noted that the historic differentials between whites and non-whites have narrowed.

Presently, non white persons constitute over 11 per cent of the total population and since 1850 has been increasing faster than the number of whites. This greater rate of increase is due, in large measure, to a drop in the non-white death rate," the report stated. Non - whites now number nearly 20 million.

POPULATION SHIFTS revealed that roughly a third of the non - whites now live in northern and western cities, another third in Southern cities and the remaining third are still in rural Southern areas. Fifty-one years ago, three-fourths of the nation's colored citizens lived in the rural South.

"With the exodus of the colored man from Southern sharecropping and small scale farming has come a readjustment in the proportion of colored persons in the labor force in those groups — young and older men where that proportion has traditionally been higher than the whites. Over the past nine years, the number of teen-age colored youths has been substantially reduced while the proportion enrolled in schools has increased more rapidly than for white youths," the report said.

Increases in both life expectancy and work - life expectancy were greater for non-whites than for whites in the period from 1940 to 1955. Life expectancy for non-whites increased 5.7 years; for whites, 2.4 years. Work - life expectancy also increased 3.8 years for non-whites and 1.6 years for whites. In 1955, non - white men, aged 20, still had a 4.6 years shorter life than whites. However, the report indicates this gap will be closed with continued availability of medical and social care.

THE NON - WHITES' living standards have been upped in the last 20 years. The average earnings of colored males have risen from 41 per cent of that of white workers to 58 per cent. During the same period, the percentage of colored persons in skilled and professional doubled.

"This improved economic condition reflects, to some extent, what I believe to be the most significant finding of the report, the increasing educational advantages available to colored youth," wrote Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell in his statement to President Eisenhower. "In education as in other fields, statistics show colored still below the levels reached by whites but rapidly gaining."

Since 1940, the number of non - whites completing school has more than doubled the rate of whites; the number in higher education institutions has increased. Whites attending college increased by 49.8 per cent while 84.1 percent among non-whites.

DESPITE THE use of restrictive covenants and other discriminatory real estate sales, home ownership by colored families has become increasingly extensive. By 1956, 36 per cent owned their own homes with a corresponding figure for white families at 46 per cent.

The report cited the Committee on Government Contracts for developing better employment opportunities for non-whites. The committee received 970 complaints and disposed of all but 252 of them between 1953 and this spring. The breakthrough in firms which previously limited employment to whites has been numerous. It cites as an example that American Airlines now employs 1,000 colored persons in New York in all capacities.

As to the future, the report reveals factors which have long been subjects of concern to the President. Negro skill rates remain disproportionately low and unemployment disproportionately high. However, the overall picture is bright, the report says.
