Hell Week 'subdued' by Alphas' plans

Something new will be added to Morgan State College's campus Friday when the annual initiation period of Greek letter organizations begins.

The 27 men of Beta Alpha Chapter, Alpha Phi Alpha, following the lead of a number of New England schools, for the first time are directing their six pledgees toward "more constructive" activities.

There will be no wasted hours in useless marching; no expenditure of hard-to-come by funds on ridiculous costumes; no absurd high jinks; and no "cruel and inhuman" punishment of men about to "cross the burning sands."

INSTEAD, THE Pledgees will occupy the major portion of their time repairing broken toys in preparation for the annual Alpha Christmas party for underprivileged children.

This affair, which this year will take on an international flavor with ten foreign youngsters as special guests, is to be held Sunday afternoon, Dec. 18 at the Student Union Building.

In addition, the young Alphas - to - be will journey to Crownsville State Hospital to wrap gifts and entertain patients and also plan to find time to wrap gifts for Provident Hospital patients.

CLIMAXING THIS program of good deeds, the Alpha pledgees are to award a scholarship cup to the Greek letter organization which ends the year with the highest average. The cup is to be a rotating award, it was explained.

The new program of initiating week activities will be financed with money which in years past was spent on less useful endeavors. Chauncey Williams, of Mobile, president of Beta Alpha said.

Beresford Swann is serving as dean of pledgees. Other officers of Beta Alpha are Werton Bellamy, Arlington, Va., vice president; Edzel Turner, Easton, Md., secretary; and Walker Robinson, Baltimore, treasurer.

'GEE, GOOD!' exclaimed five - year - old Hariette Lane, as her mommie prepares another slice of Schmidt's new 'taliano bread.

The John Lanes, bread experts, go for the new 'taliano loaf

An average of ten loaves of bread a week is consumed by the John E. Lane family of 2208 Whittier Ave.

Naturally, Mr. Lane, Mrs. Lane (Genesta), and their four children can qualify for the title "connoisseur" where bread is concerned.

"It goes fast in our house . . . ten loaves is average, often we eat more. The children love bread. They know good bread when they taste it."

On Monday, the Lane family gave its stamp of approval to the new "taliano' bread, just put on the market by the Schmidt Baking Co.

THIS REPORTER and a photographer were on the scene to watch the Lane experts taste the new Italian loaf, and give their decision.

Ten-year-old John Jr., a typical American boy, had the first slice. His comment, "Boy, the crust is even good." He was back for a second slice before his sisters had a chance.

Harriette, age 5, and a budding actress, noted dramatically, "Mommie, why haven't you been buying this good bread all along?"

Yvonne, 11, smiled her approval. Even ten-month-old Gina, who has just two teeth, held out her hand and stopped her whining, after the first bite.

In minutes, the entire loaf was gone. Mommie and Daddy Lane also sampled a slice.

"That does it," said Mrs. Lane, "we'll have to get it regularly."

THE NEW 'taliano loaf, which the Lane family has put on its weekly market list, is made by the bakers of Schmidt's Blue Ribbon Bread, another favorite of Baltimore homemakers.

But 'taliano is different—it is hearth-baked. Schmidt's Bakery explains that they slow down the clock, age the bread a bit after mixing, and then bake it slowly in the hearth.

That's how they get the enriched flavor which 'taliano offers.

The John Lane family knows about the goodness, the sweetness, the extra-ape-cial something which makes 'taliano different. Try it yourself and see.—B.M.P.

THEY REALLY LIVE, THOSE ITALIANS

When it comes to food, every American is an Italian at heart. And does anyone bake better bread? We think we've captured that early goodness in 'taliano — a bread whose recipe came right out of an Italian kitchen.

The mix is actually aged a bit like fine wine, then the plump loaves are set into a hearth to bask to a golden brown.

Try it toasted. You'll never stop at one slice. But then who wants to?
