Father Croll sues wife for divorce

The Rev. David H. Croll, rector of St. Philip's Episcopal Mission, Annapolis, filed a double deal suit for divorce from his wife of 36 years, this week.

In a petition filed by the firm of G. Wallace Colburn and Niles, Barton, Yost and Dankmeyer, the priest asks for a divorce on grounds of desertion, and in a second bid, that if the court fails to find on those charges that he be freed on grounds of voluntary separation.

The action is directed against Mrs. Henrietta Croll of 2336 Ivy Avenue, Morgan Park, this city, who he married on August 21, 1924.

In the bill, Father Croll sets forth that though she was a kind, faithful and affectionate husband, that during the year 1934 Mrs. Croll deserted and abandoned him and that the abandonment has continued uninterruptedly since that time.

He says the act was deliberate and final and that there is no reasonable hope or expectation of reconciliation.

* * *

IN A FOLLOWING paragraph the petition states:

"That should the court not find that the matter and facts set forth are true and correct as stated, then, in the alternative your complainant alledges that during the year 1934, he and the Respondent (Mrs. Croll) agreed to live separate and apart, and have so lived voluntarily and without any cohabitation for three consecutive years prior to the filing of this bill and such separation is beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation.

MRS. SHIRLEY PARKER of 827 Bethune Road, won a divorce from Bernard Parker of 2417 Calverton Heights, after testifying that she feared

"I left him", said she. "He was always fighting and I was afraid of him and the children were afraid".

The couple was married in 1947 and separated in 1955 according to the testimony. They are parents of two sons. She was given custody of the children and he ordered to provide $12 per week for their support.

* * *

A DIVORCE went to Mrs. Arrie B. Hayes from William Hayes who said that her husband left without any explanation.

Mrs. Hayes who lives at 2518 Arunah Avenue and Mr. Hayes were married in 1933 and separated in 1958.

Her 16-year-old daughter, Miss Aretha Hayes, testified for her mother.

Said she:

"My father was not a faithful husband. He left the house many times. He would leave for two or three nights in a week.

"I would tell him of things I needed for school. He would say he would get them to me, that I would have this, and that. But we never received anything from him".

RUSSELL GRIFFIN was divorced by Mrs. Elizabeth Griffin of 2411 Harlem Avenue.

The husband, said Mrs. Griffin, lives at 1015 W. Mulberry St. She charged that she was deserted in 1951, following their marriage in 1948.

Their one child, a son, was given into custody of the mother, and he ordered to pay $15 per week for the boy's support.

William L. Fitzgerald was attorney for Mrs. Griffin.

Three named

Three leaders in Baltimore area merchandising, finance and industry have been named vice chairman of The Commerce and Industry Combined Health Appeal as the campaign organization readied for the March fund raising drive.

The topecheion posts went to Albert D. Hutzler Jr., who will head up the commercial service, and food and drink division; Harry E. Karr Jr., in charge of the financial, professional and communications division, and Donald C. Lee, who took over the heavy tomobile and petroleum and construction division.

13 charged in sale of narcotics

Testimony that dope purchases were made on Madison, Eden, N. Gilmor Sts., and Argyle Ave., were given by federal agents in Central Police Court Tuesday.

The locations were mentioned when a dozen persons including a 17-year-old high school pupil were charged with selling heroin.

Total bail for the men was set at $40,000 by Magistrate T. Barton Harrington.

All are being held for action of the grand jury.

A 18th defendant, Miss Shirley Jacobs, 25, of the 1700 block E. Eager St., was held on $1,000 bail in Pine Street Police Court Wednesday.

Miss Jacobs is charged with selling heroin to a narcotics agent on Nov. 1, 1960.

* * *

THE SUSPECTS charged at Central were:

Theodore Roosevelt Bracey Jr., 22, of the 1200 block McCulbin Ct., $3,000 bail.

Harold Waller Jr., 18, 1100 block N. Gilmor St., $4,000 bail.

Joseph Thomas Herndon, 32, y00 block Aisquith St., $3,000 bail.

Alfred Richard Burch, 19, 1400 block Mosher St., $3,000 bail.

Monroe Lawrence Wright, 30, 1800 block E. Fayette St., $4,000 bail.

Howard Perry Lewis Jr., 23, 1500 block E. Madison St., $4,000 bail.

Robert Lee Allen, 32, 100 block Market Pl., $4,000 bail.

Herman Gaines, 23, 1600 block W. Lafayette Ave., $4,000 bail.

Earl Leach Jr., 20, 1200 block Canal Ct., $3,000 bail.

Lloyd S. Palmer, 21, 1200 block Laurens St., $3,000 bail.

And, Reginald D. Mason, 22, of the 1500 block Braddish Ave., $5,000 bail.

THE 17-YEAR-OLD youth, who is charged with selling heroin on Jan. 16 was released on his own recognizance.

Arresting officers requested that his name not be used.

Mason was sentenced to five years in prison on another narcotics charge a week ago.

Burch is now serving a four - year term in the Reformatory for burglary.

The 12 suspects were arrested between Saturday and Monday in a round-up by city and federal agents.

According to Capt. Joseph F. Carroll, narcotics bureau chief, the arrests followed six months of investigation.

A team of 10 city and federal officers under the command of Capt. Carroll and Irwin Greenfeld, chief federal narcotics agent, worked on the cases.

The agents posed as addicts and purchased $1,600 worth of narcotics.

FOR JOB WELL DONE — At NAACP's annual meeting held recently, Mrs. Florence Snowden, 1930 Druid Hill Ave., was presented a plaque citing her for 25 years outstanding service with the NAACP by the Rev. Gentry McDonald, branch official.

Elementary pupils walk anyway, need no bus fare

The practice of districting schools in Baltimore, so that elementary school children go to the school nearest their home, is proving a "heavensent plan" to parents who may not be able to afford 30 cents a day for bus fare for each of their children.

A recent AFRO survey shows that most elementary school children walk to school and are not feeling the effects of the Baltimore Transit Company's students fare boost from 10 cents to 15 cents.

Here are the answers principals gave to the question "What problems have come since the bus fare has been increased?"

* * *

DAVID KAUFMAN, vice - principal, City College, said: "If there is an effect you would expect it to show up here.

"We have 3,300 pupils from all area of the city — Cherry Hill, Pikesville, Highlandtown, Gwynn Oak and beyond — as well as the counties.

"Not one teacher has come down here to the office to say anything about the bus fare. Not one pupil has claimed the bus fare as an excuse for absence.

"The attendance has not gone up or down for this reason."

* * *

DOUGLASS HIGH SCHOOL with 2,533 pupils also from all areas of the city has not complained so far, according to principal, Mrs. Lillian Parrott who told the AFRO:

"I know the problem must exist somewhere, but it has not come to me as such.

"We have older children not little fellows. Maybe they are walking, I don't know.

"They have a way of accepting things. They're making it somehow."

* * *

HARRY PARKER, principal of Booker T. Washington Junior High No. 130 has a total of 2,442 pupils coming from all areas of the city.

He told the AFRO: "To my knowledge there has been no effect of the rise in bus fare.

"Absences as a whole have not shown anything related to extra bus fare. We find that pupils parents make all kind of sacrifices to keep them in school and keep them happy."

* * *

MRS. LOUISE M. DENNIS principal of Druid Hill Elementary School, Francis St. and Clifton Ave., said: "This is a neighborhood school and all children are within walking distance."

Lafayette Junior High School, No. 49-A, Park Ave., at Hoffman St., where Charles Wolfe is principal, is also a neighborhood school.

Mr. Wolfe said: "Most of our children are from the neighborhood and there is very little riding to school. Most of them walk. The school is districted."

* * *

WILBUR VALENTINE, principal of the Edgar Allen Poe Elementary School No. 1 at Fayette and Greene Sts., said: "So far, I can't tell. It's too soon to know if our absences are effected by bus fare hikes or not. I honestly don't know about the relationship to the attendance.

"However, there is one definite effect.

"When the funds we draw on for car fare for needy children are gone then we will feel it because the money is bound to run out.

"Whereas I used to give $1 a week for a child's car fare, now it is $1.50. The amount given to a needy child at 3 p.m. each day is now 30 cents instead of 20 cents. You can see how the amount adds up."

The fund to which Mr. Schmidt referred is supplied by private organizations on a voluntary basis and makes money available for bus fare at 20 cents a day.

"Prior to the rise in fare," Dr. Goldstein says, "a $1 a week car fare for one child made, say, $4 a month we put out.

"Now, the cost of the same is $6 a month — just plain arithmetic.

"The problem is as simple and, it means that the fund will go down quicker; he added.

NAACP accuses BURHA of encouraging discrimination

The NAACP's board of directors on Wednesday "wholly rejected" the preference policy recently adopted by the Baltimore Urban Renewal and Housing Agency in connection with the Mt. Royal - Fremont Urban Renewal Project 1.

In a statement made public, the new policy was called "extremely disappointing and totally inadequate."

"The NAACP board also said that the "preference" policy discourages cooperation of the local development industry by inviting "equivocation, dissension and the lack of cooperation."

Under BURHA's preference policy, developers who sign a contract agreeing not to discriminate are supposed to be given some sort of preferred standing.

This was BURHA's answer to repeated calls that it support an open occupancy position in all renewal activities.

* * *

THE NAACP declared: the building and real estate industry, while they may not be enthusiastic about open occupancy, have made known their willingness to BURHA to cooperate if a segment of the industry are equally affected by an uncompromising policy, so that other elements cannot escape on a preference.

"In establishing a policy which will entertain bids from builders who discriminate, as well as from those who do not discriminate, BURHA is discouraging the cooperation of local industry.

"BURHA by this policy invites equivocation, dissension and the lack of cooperation by industry.

"We wholly reject the policy of preference."

The NAACP called on BURA for "bold leadership and vision, not halting mincing steps . . ."

The board's statement was signed by Mrs. Lillie M. Jackson, president; the Rev. H. O. Graham, secretary, and Dr. Charles Watts, treasurer.

BTC will accept decision by PUC

The Baltimore Transit Company has announced its acceptance of a five cent raise in students' fares, a refusal of a five cent boost in adult fares from 25 to 30 cents, and an order to halt the sale of tokens.

The rate actions became effective Jan. 6 on an order issued by the Public Service Commission.

In accepting the PUC decision, the BTC noted that its acceptance "is conditioned upon forbearance of any party or person in interest seeking judicial review of the order."

The BTC also reserved all its rights "to judicial review of the Commission's order and findings, as granted by Article 78, of the Annotated Code of Maryland.

Busy mother of three finds telephone gives 21 extra hours in two weeks...saves $17.38 and 200 miles of traveling

Mrs. Duden uses her phone to find out if a local fabric store has some material she needs.

Mrs. H. Richard Duden of Annapolis recently kept a two-week record of all her family's telephone calls. For each call she also estimated any expense, time and traveling that were saved by being able to telephone.

At the end of two weeks, her tally showed that the telephone had given them almost a full day of extra time, and had saved far more in traveling expenses than the cost of their telephone service.

Whether it was a call to summon a washer repairman or rounding up the youngsters, the phone made busy days easier.

Mrs. Duden found, too, that some calls provide pleasure and peace of mind that can't be measured in time or money saved. For instance, her husband who is an insurance representative and football coach, had to make a business trip to Florida. His Long Distance call to the family went into a "special" category of her telephone diary.

Perhaps you might like to keep a diary to see what your telephone does. We think you'd find, too, that your telephone saves much more in time, trouble and expense — than the cost of having it.

Never Too Old For Schooling

Adult Education Program is the answer to a prayer for thousands of Baltimoreans who never got a chance to complete their education, or want to learn new skills.

By GEORGE COLLINS

"Adult education doesn't cost . . . It pays!"

That's the thinking of an expert on the subject, and close examination leaves no room for disagreement.

The above opinion was voiced by Wilmer Y. Bell, director, Division of Adult Education, Baltimore Department of Education.

Mr. Bell was commenting on the merits of the city's program to educate roughly 75,000 of its 600,000 adults, over the age of 25, whose learning stopped at, or below, the fourth grade level.

The above statistics were taken from the 1950 census report. Those in the 1960 Census are as yet incomplete.

* * *

HOWEVER, MR. BELL said his department has no reason to believe that the situation has improved over the last decade.

As a matter of fact, the population shift, where the educated adults fled to the suburbs, while the uneducated continued to migrate to the central city, could have well worsened matters, Mr. Bell feels.

For that reason, he is of the opinion that the city's 1950 adult education level of 8.6 years of schooling has remained fairly static.

This average falls far short of that found in Los Angeles, Calif., where rating was 12.1 years of schooling ten years ago.

In this age of automation, rising cost of living, and a generally more complex society, the need for adult education is more acute, Mr. Bell declares.

* * *

THE EDUCATOR reversed the subject of cost while discussing the program, which has averaged $325,000 yearly for the past 10 years.

"What does it cost the city to have uneducated adults?" Mr. Bell asks.

"When you consider the financial burdens of delinquency, welfare recipients, prison population, all by-products of uneducated adults, there is no comparison," he said.

He listed other results as uninformed voting, improper use of equipment and waste of materials, all of which add additional expense on the city and employers.

Heart of the Adult Education program are the 20 Evening School centers, serving 24,000 students. Courses offered are divided into two categories.

* * *

THE FIRST ONE is the Credit Program. This curriculum includes all essential subjects leading to a high school diploma and further education.

The other, called the Non-Credit Program, deals with personal subjects such as art, music, philosophy, etc.

To aid in bearing the cost of the Adult Evening School, the city began charging a small fee last year.

To enroll in the Credit Program, a student must pay a registration fee according to the number of nights his class meets. That is, if his class meets three nights weekly, for a semester, he pays $3.

In the non - credit program, a flat fee is charged. To attend a 10-week class teaching the personal subjects, a student is required to pay $10 at the time of registration.

Vocational trades are also taught and the fee is similar to that for general academic subjects.

Since the beginning of the registration fees, Mr. Bell said attendance has fallen off an average of 26 per cent, generally.

However, in blighted areas, where the need for education is greatest, it has soared to 60 per cent.

* * *

BEFORE THE introduction of the small charge, the credit program had an enrollment of 30,000, compared to today's total of 24,000.

The non - credit program has been all-but eliminated. Its enrollment has dropped from 2,000 last year to around 130 for the current session, Mr. Bell revealed.

Registrations for the second semester, beginning Jan. 30, will be held Monday and Tuesday, Jan. 23-24.

Technical obsolescence (i.e. machines replacing unskilled, semi-skilled and skilled workers) has heightened the need for adult education, Mr. Bell relates.

Due to the rapid advance of science and technology, the average worker can expect to follow three different occupations during his lifetime, the educator pointed out.

Thus the problem of making these transitions smoothly arises. The only answer is additional education, he declared.

Job upgrading, new skills, retraining and the resultant bigger pay envelope in a highly technical society, all demand more education, the superintendent pointed out.

Since most adults work in the day, the only answer is night school.

Labor leaders, A. Philip Randolph and George Meany all agree with this finding. Automation, they have repeatedly warned, will displace millions of unskilled, semi-skilled and skilled workers. Unless they acquire new know - how and skills, these workers face a bleak future.

IF THERE were a need to justify the city's support of the Adult Evening Education program, such evidence would be forthcoming with a minimum amount of effort.

"When a man earns a $10 raise on his job as a result of new skills learned in school, the city, as well as the individual benefits.

"Over a number of years, he pays more taxes, buys more food, clothing, appliances and other conveniences of modern living.

"Consider, too, the number of laywers, businessmen, accountants, teachers, craftsmen, religious and community leaders who would have been little more than low - income laborers, had they not had the benefit of evening school.

"Not only they, but the community, city and state are much the better for it . . .

"Adult education doesn't cost . . . it pays!"

Among Baltimore and Maryland's most illustrious graduates of evening school, Mr. Bell points out, is former Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin.

* * *

IN CHECKING success stories of night school alumni, the AFRO found a long and impressive list, this week. On it are businessmen, ministers, teachers, and many, many varied professionals.

Cyrus Stevenson, local hardware merchant, is an example.

Mr. Stevenson dropped out of school to operate a music studio while in his third year of high school.

When music came to the public school system, his profession was wrecked, he said.

After his studio folded, he spent a short time with a musical aggregation, working now and then.

Convinced that he was doomed to a life of uncertainty and limited means, Mr. Stevenson decided to return to school.

He earned his diploma in 1937 and enrolled in Howard-University School of Music.

While attending Howard, he conducted an appliance store business. Then the war came. He left Howard to enter the service, but it ended before his induction was completed.

When he found his chosen profession (music) a bit shaky in the post war years, Mr. Stevenson decided to re-enter business.

Today, at 65, he owns and operates a successful tile and floor covering business and a hardware store at 2400 Pennsylvania Ave.

Calling his business substantial, Mr. Stevenson said he also owns five apartment houses.

"I can truthfully say that the evening school has meant more to me financially than anything I know," he declared.

His advice to adults who have failed to complete their education for one reason or another is:

"A man (or woman) must have some education if he is to make it through life. It is a matter of economics and if you don't have it, you are in for a bad time."

Mr. Stevenson lives at 2537 McCulloh with his wife. They have no children.

* * *

ONE OF Baltimore's leading ministers, the Rev. Dennis Barrow, pastor, Fountain Baptist Church, is another graduate of the city's evening school program.

The Rev. Mr. Barrow returned to school in 1930 while working as a laborer on construction jobs and at the shipyard.

Having dropped out of school while in the third grade, he earned his high school diploma in 1939.

Following graduation, he studied ministery under the late W. J. Winston and church management from the late, Dr. Simon Williamson.

While training, the Rev. Mr. Barrow became pastor of the First Baptist Church in Port Deposit, Md., where he served for one year.

Leaving the county, he became assistant pastor of Fountain Baptist Church, serving under the late, Revs. E. W. White and J. R. Coyle.

He assumed pastorship of Fountain in 1938 and inherited a congregation of 75 financed members.

Today, his congregation numbers 1,600 members.

His reason for returning to school? "I felt a call to the ministry, and I knew I must be prepared," he said.

It was a wise decision, the friendly minister declares.

He lives with his wife, the former Miss Bessie Bagley, whom he married when he graduated, at 2100 N. Wolfe St.

* * *

ANOTHER SUCCESSFUL Baltimorean who was lifted out of the realm of the ordinary by the Adult Evening School is the Rev. William Tapscott, minister - teacher.

The Rev. Mr. Tapscott took his diploma from Douglass Evening School after five years study. The former laborer at a manufacturing firm had dropped out of school after reaching the sixth grade.

Following graduation, he entered Morgan State College where he took his degree in 1938. He began teaching the following fall.

While teaching, the clergyman-educator took his masters at Columbia University, where he also earned a degree from that School's Union Theology School.

Presently he is a history teacher at School No. 130 and pastors the 500-member Tabernacle Gospel Church, Rosedale St. and Walbrook Ave.

He and his wife, Mrs. Edith Tapscott live at 1521 N. Appleton St. They have no children.

Advising those who were unable to finish school early in life, he agrees with Mr. Bell:

"It pays off, financially, socially and otherwise. And neither the opportunity nor need has ever been greater than now."

MUSICIAN NOW BUSINESSMAN — Cyrus Stevenson, explaining one of the many products sold at his prosperous business establishment. Returning to school after dropping out as a high school junior was one of the smartest things he's ever done, he says.

HE RETURNED, TOO — The Rev. Dennis Barrow, pastor of the 1,600 - member Fountain Baptist Church, relaxes in his study. Forced to leave school in the fourth grade, he later graduated from Dunbar High in 1938, after nine years in the Adult Evening School.

Something New In Chicken Plucking

By HERB MANGRUM

Dear Boss:

The day I said I was going out to find a cotton picking chicken plucker, you thought I was off my roost.

You should know by now that I'm the kind of guy who goes for anything on the off-beat side.

But, there is method to my mad boss.

I really did want to know if there were any cotton picking chicken pluckers lurking about.

* * *

FOR MONTHS now I have heard old friends refer to each other as cotton picking chicken pluckers.

Steve Allen may have started the fad on his television show about a year ago.

But anyhow, I went looking for a cotton picking chicken plucker and I found one.

Learned right off the bat that chicken plucking, if you will pardon the grammar, ain't what it used to be.

Remember when your old man would stand out in the back yard and wring a chicken's neck?

Well that's out. It's all done by machines nowadays.

I found a couple of chicken pluckers but they didn't smile at all when I asked if they had ever been called cotton picking chicken pluckers.

I didn't want to offend anyone so I didn't repeat the question.

* * *

I REQUESTED and was granted permission to tour Resnick Brothers, a wholesale poultry house at 2662 Pennsylvania Ave.

When I opened the door Wednesday morning I knew I was home safe.

If you will pardon a pun, the feathers were flying.

What started out in the way of a joke turned out to be an education.

Chickens are not picked by hand at all at Resnick Brothers.

And get this, the birds are not processed on a production line basis either.

* * *

THE DAY I looked around Charles Blackwell of 1121 N. Calhoun St., was handling the chicken plucking detail.

It was an experience watching the man work.

Grabbing six chickens at a time (three in each hand), Mr. Blackwell would dip the fowl in boiling water, throw them one at a time across a rotating drum studded with spikes and that was it.

The feathers disappeared as if by magic into a vacuum above the machine.

In rapid fire order the birds were removed from a metal table, dumped into boiling water, brought out again and their necks tucked in as neat as you please.

The next step involved dumping the chickens in a vat of water heated above the boiling point.

They emerged drawn as tight as the proverbial hat band, and were tossed into a second vat filled to the brim with ice.

There they were to remain until called for by store owners from around the city.

* * *

DO YOU want to know why it's all done by machines, Boss?

The way you hold onto money you should know. It's cheaper.

For example, when Resnick Brothers went into business in 1929 they processed more than 1,000 chickens a week.

They average now about 200 chickens a day and with a 13-man staff yet.

* * *

I HAVE been told there is a lot of chicken plucking going on over on the Eastern Shore.

That's where the big firms are.

Poultry men on this side of the Chesapeake Bay say the Eastern Shore people turn out their products like Ford turns out cars.

But, Boss, the real intention of this article was to find a cotton picking chicken plucker.

In my quest for the truth things turned out about like this.

Abraham Lincoln said: "God must have loved the common man because he made so many."

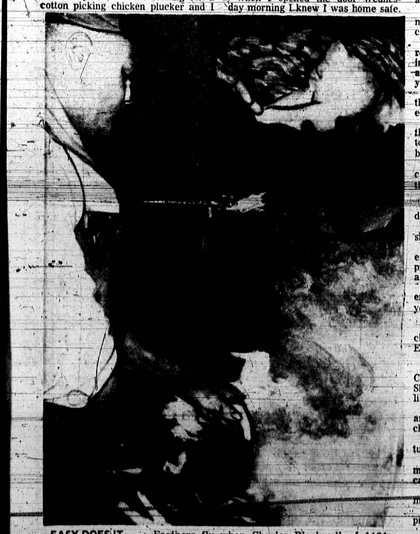
Someone else said: "Try calling a man common and see what you get.

That's the way it is with a cotton picking chicken pluckers.

A man may admit he's a chicken plucker, but try calling him a cotton picker and you are asking for it.

Sorry I failed you, Boss.

Your man Monday through Friday,
HERB



EASY DOES IT — Feathers fly when Charles Blackwell of 1121 N. Calhoun St., goes to work on the plucking machine at Resnick Brothers. Mr. Blackwell is one of the few chicken pluckers left in Baltimore City. The poultry industry has become mechanized. The inset is a closeup of the machine in operation.

Douglass In Bronze

In commemoration of the 144th anniversary of the birth of Frederick Douglass, a portrait head, done in bronze, will be unveiled in his Frederick Douglass High School on Feb. 14.

James E. Lewis, associate professor of art and head of the department at Morgan State College, is the sculptor and is presently working on a clay model.

Describing the process, Mr. Lewis explained that first the image is modeled in non-hardening clay and then it is cast in plaster.

Following this, a plaster mould is made. This will then be taken to a foundry in New York to be cast in bronze.

Mr. Lewis has done similar portraits of Dr. Dwight O. W. Holmes, president emeritus of Morgan State College, former Governor Theodore R. McKeldin, the late Dean of Men Charles Key, a bronze of the late John H. Murphy Sr., founder of the AFRO-AMERICAN Newspapers and Sidney Hollander Sr.

In addition to the Douglass piece of sculpture, Mr. Lewis is working on a series known as "Men of Morgan."

This series will include such outstanding men as: Judge Morris A. Soper, emeritus member of the Board of Trustees; Carl J. Murphy, chairman of the Board of Trustees; Dr. Martin D. Jenkins, president of the college; the late Dean of the College Dr. George C. Grant, and Dr. John O. Spencer, fifth president of the college whose foresight was responsible for the selection of the present site of Morgan State College.
