MUSICAL MOMENTS

Holy Trinity Choir gives performance of 'Messiah'

By ADAH K. JENKINS

Devotees of "Messiah" who feel that Christmas is not complete without hearing Part 1 of this great oratorio had the opportunity of hearing an exceedingly well prepared rendition of excerpts from Part 11, which is known as the "Easter" portion.

This most rewarding occasion was afforded by the devoted Industry of the 31-voice choir of Holy Trinity Chapel (Episcopal) under the studious and capable direction of Norman E. Ross, choir master.

There can be no doubt that the choir is composed of serious musicians, for no one else would attempt the difficulties of this part of "Messiah;" which is all the more taxing because it is much less familiar than Part 1.

* * *

ANOTHER difficult aria "Why Do the Nations Rage," for bass, was well sung by James Taylor. Earl Brooks, tenor, gave a most convincing interpretation of the recitatives and arias "Thy Rebuke Hath Broken His Heart," "Behold and See," "He Has Gone Up" and "Thou Didst Not Leave His Soul in Hell."

With Sophie Johnson at the organ ample justice was done the elaborate instrumental score, which was written originally for an orchestra.

Following the Offertory, the choir was joined by a chamber orchestra under the direction of Chester Dowlette, for the "Requiem Mass" (for the dead) by Faure.

This afforded an excellent opportunity to contrast the treatment of a religious theme by a classic composer like Handel and a late romanticist of Faure's stature.

This marked the third annual presentation of the Mass by Holy Trinity Choir. Due to the limitations of the sanctuary and choir stalls there is a problem of placing the orchestra so that the two conductors can be in complete unison.

The capacity audience adjourned to the parish hall following the concert for a reception arranged by the Acolyte Mothers Guild and the Women's Auxiliary, who also served as ushers.

A number of patrons underwrite this annual sacred concert; but to insure more such events during the year the choir is organizing a regular patron group to be known as Friends of the Choir, with Earl Booker Jr. as chairman. The Rev. Van S. Bird is vicar of the Chapel.

APPEARING before a large audience at the Heritage Tea, sponsored by The Women's Society of Christian Service at Metropolitan Methodist Church, were: Beryl Williams, pianist, Clarice Coleman, colatura soprano, Gloria Tate, Mrs. Marshall Jones Jr., and James Rogers, also vocalists and Thomas Wilcox, dramatic reader. Mrs. Lillian Lawrence president of the Society, spoke on "So Rich a Heritage."

A very novel and unconventional musicale was presented by the ROTC Glee Club of West Virginia State College, which appeared last week at the Pennsylvania Avenue AME Zion Church.

Judging from the response, the majority of the many listeners enjoyed the event. Dr. P. Ahmed Williams, the director, follows a traditional "glee club" pattern, which is far more informal than that of the usual concerts by a choral ensemble.

After the first groups of songs, which were devoted to choruses by Haydn, Handel and Randall Thompson, Dr. Williams delivered excerpts from famous speeches by Abraham Lincoln, accompanied by choral speech and singing of the 22-voice club.

The singers then changed from their concert attire to uniforms and proceeded to have fun with two cowboy songs by Labuff and the West Indian game song "Hole in the Buckett," which had the audience roaring.

For an encore they sang the picturesque "Funeral of Sister Bessie Jones" which described the joyful funeral ceremonies customary in some rural Southern communities.

Of the spirituals the most striking was a "Sermon and Gospel - Noah and the Rain," an arrangement by the director.

The ROTC Glee Club was organized in 1947 for veterans and ROTC students on West Virginia State College campus, "who wished to band together for the joys of singing." Appearances have been made throughout West Virginia as well as in many cities of the East and Midwest.

The local concert was sponsored by the Emma Clement Guild of the church, Mrs. Florence Carter, president and the Rev. C. R. Coleman, pastor.
