JOANNE WOODWARD, as Eve Black, one of "The Three Faces of Eve," performs an amorous dance for a casual pick-up in a scene from the Twentieth Century-Fox CinemaScope production which also stars Dave Wayne and Lee J. Cobb. Picture is now at the Regent Theatre.

MAUREEN O'HARA explains to Brian Keith that all wounds are not visible in this tender scene from "The Deadly Companions," now at the New Albert Theatre, where she bares her past as a dance hall girl who was forced to allow men to kiss and hold her for their money. Co-starring in this rugged, historical action drama of the American frontier just after the Civil War, are Steve Cochran and Chill Wills. Film is in Pathe Color and Panavision.

'THE THREE FACES OF EVE' NOW AT REGENT

Renewed proof of the strangeness of truth over fiction is the theme of Twentieth Century-Fox's Cinema Scope production of "The Three Faces of Eve," which stars screen newcomer Joanne Woodward, David Wayne and Lee J. Cobb.

The film is now at the Regent Theatre.

Taken from the true account of a case of multiple personality treated by two Georgia psychiatrists, the never-before-filmed story, produced, directed and written by Nunnally Johnson, concerns a housewife who had three personalities at once: a drab, mousy introvert, a wanton woman and a mature, normal young lady.

'DEADLY COMPANIONS' AT NEW ALBERT

"The Deadly Companions," a story of dynamic conflicts among four people alone in the vast wilderness of the Arizona desert is now at the New Albert theatre.

The four are:

1) A labeled but defiant woman fighting against her developing love for a man she ought to hate.

2) A man living only for the bitter sweet taste of revenge and taking his time about it.

3) A demented despot driven by his avaricious dreams.

4) A trigger-happy youth with a growing lust.

'THE YOUNG DOCTORS' NOW PLAYING AT MET

"The Young Doctors" is a movie about, for and by young people. Fresh in approach, youthful in outlook, it is stimulating entertainment for the young in heart. The romantic drama is now playing at the Met Theatre, through United Atists release.

The producers themselves are startlingly youthful. At 31, this is Stuart Millar's third film; however, it is his first in association with 34-year-old Lawrence Turman, formerly his agent, now his partner in this venture. Millar-Turman Productions are ci-venturing on the movie with Dick Clark's Drexel Films Corporation. Dick, of course, needs no introduction to young people. At 30 the top national TV personality in the young people's field, he here makes his debut as a serious dramatic actor. Among his co-stars are Ben Gazzara and Ina Balin, two of the most dynamic young personalities in the industry (along with old-timers Fredric March and Eddie Albert, who are young in heart).

'ADA' HELD OVER AT HARLEM THEATRE

When it comes to dramatic conversations, Dean Martin carries on some dandies with his golf ball.

Watch him when he's preparing to tee off. Chances are before he starts that professional swing, he'll address an emotional phrase or two to the ball. Then, after socking it into the far distance, he's apt to send a string of words in the same general direction. And while he's walking to the next shot, the monologue is likely to continue.

Granted, it's nothing new for an ardent golfer to make an impassioned plea to his golf ball, but Martin's mouthings are not of the ordinary mold.

His newest role opposite Susan Hayward in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Ada," held over at the Harlem, was studied in that manner.

MUSICAL MOMENTS

Hazel Joan Bryant scores in impressive concert

By ADAH JENKINS

With uncommonly high fortitude Hazel Joan Bryant sang a lengthy and very exacting concert on one of the most humid Sundays we have had hereabouts.

Her simplicity and assurance coupled with a really handsome voice won the very sizable audience which braved the heat.

Miss Bryant's lyric soprano has a decided edge on the dramatic. The intonation is true and the tones well placed, although one felt there was some forcing in the upper tones.

Hazel adds to her notable musicianship a most valuable asset that vocalists sometimes neglect.

A compelling sweep combined with a sense of serious dedication communicated the intent and message of each composition. This was apparent especially in the aria from "Madame Butterfly" and in the Dvorak Gypsy song style. The latter contained moments of vivid contrasts and an especially lovely "Rings in der Wald" (All in the woods is so still and quiet).

A very definite sense of drama pervaded the "Entreat Me No to Leave Thee" (Gounod and "O Thou Bilowy Harvest." Of the five spirituals that concluded the recital Burleigh arrangement of "The Blind Man Stood on the Road" was most appealing.

HANSONIA CALDWELL at the piano proved to be a most able accompanist, fulfilling her role with competence and musicianship.

Miss Bryant who is the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Harrison Bryant, is in her senior year at Oberlin Conservatory, where she is a soloist in the College Choir.

The concert was sponsored by the AME Ministers Wives Alliance of Baltimore and vicinity, with Meadames Eloise Nash and Mattie Sewell co-chairing.

PERSON - TO - PERSON: Back at his post in the music department of City College after a year of graduate work in music and New York trek during vacation days.

Among the outstanding musicians of Detroit he met one Mr. Ayple, who plays in the viola section of the Detroit symphony.

He is the first of our instrumentalists to make the orchestra, after several seasons at Interlochen, the famous mid-west sum or music school, that ranks with its Eastern counterpart, Tanglewood.

While in the mid-west Mr. Anderson spent considerable time at the Detroit Library, where he pursued some highly interesting research on our early musicians, both performing artists and instructors.

He found an amazingly inclusive memorial collection of Mme. Azalia Hackley, who is recalled for her very successful seasons in Baltimore some years ago as a vocal coach and choral director.

Mr. Anderson found New York musical circles buzzing with the news that Grace Bumbray has signed this season with Impresario Sol Hurok.

The soprano created a sensation during the summer at Beyreuth, where she sang the role of "Venus" in the opera "Tannahuser". Miss Bumbray is the first of our singers to perform in the annual Wagnerian Festival.
