AT THE HARLEM — "Shadows" now playing at the Harlem, the simple drama, which was casually concocted as they went along, revolves around a colored girl who is "passing" — not deliberately or surreptitiously, but simply because she looks white and is herself indifferent to the matter of race.

AT FORD'S opening Dec. 11 will be the prize winning play "A Taste of Honey". Hermione Baddeley (left) and Frances Cuka are shown in a scene from the play.

AT THE MET — Lee Kinsolving and Patty McCormack are teenagers with adult emotions in "The Explosive Generation," now playing at the Met Theatre, through United Artists release. Billy Gray and William Shatner co-star in this story of youth on a rampage.

AT THE ROYAL — Susan Strasberg and Ronald Lewis in a chilling scene from the Royal Theatre's current shocker "Scream of Fear". "Queen of the Pirates" is the second attraction.

'Shadows' playing at the Harlem

John Cassavetes' "SHADOWS" now playing at the Harlem, began as a dream in a New York loft on Jan. 14, 1957. Today that dream has won international awards.

"Shadows" concerns three members of a colored family who live in Greenwich Village. There is lightskinned younger brother Ben (Ben Carruthers), whose two white buddies generally goof off, makes jokes, pick up girls, and finally get their high - spirited brains knocked out in an alley. There is darkskinned older brother Hugh (Hugh Hurd), a proud singer who is reduced to performing in thirdrate flesh pits.

Most importantly, there is light - skinned sister Lelia (Lelia Goldoni), a mischievous, restless soul who studies painting and drifts into an affair — her first — with a white smoothie (Anthony Ray).

Youngsters explode in film at Met

One of the most exciting and controversial films from Hollywood in 1961 is "The Explosive Generation," which boasts a cast of young stars headed by Patty McCormack, Lee Kinsolving, William Shatner and Billy Gray. It is now playing at the Met Theatre, through United Artists release.

The film tells a story of young people who want to assert their presence, make known their aims, ambitions and desires, without resorting to switch blade knives or gang wars.

Star Patty McCormack has her most important part since that of the murderous little girl in "The Bag Seed." Her boy friend is played by Lee Kinsolving, who scored such high critical praise for his work in "The Dark At The Top of The Stairs."

'Scream of Fear' is unusual show

"Scream of Fear," now at the Royal Theatre, stars love young Miss Strasberg, Ronald Lewis and Ann Todd.

The single scene available is a dramatic one of the raven - haired Miss Strasberg, caught by the camera in that split second when her expression changes from fearful apprehension to screaming terror.

Obviously, the story of "Scream of Fear" cannot be disclosed here. It concerns a young and beautiful girl, paralyzed and confined to a wheelchair as the result of an accident, who travels to a French Riviera villa for a reunion with her father whom she has not seen for many years.

She is greeted by her father's second wife, an attractive and sympathetic woman who assures the girl that the father is away on business. The girl sees her father's dead body, not once but several times, and always under circumstances persuading others she is suffering from hallucinations; nobody believes her except perhaps her stepmother's young and handsome chauffeur. Second attraction is "Queen of the Pirates".

Dual celebration at Fellowship Sun.

Fellowship House, 3200 N. Hilton St., will be the site of a unique celebration, Sunday 3:30 to 5:30 p.m.

Families for Fellowship will sponsor a program depicting an old-fashioned family celebration of Hanukkah and Christmas.

Parents and children will decorate the building, play games appropriate to the season, sing Christmas Carols and Hanukkah songs and enjoy traditional holiday foods.

Instead of being told of the two versions of the holiday celebration, participants will "share in doing" such things as trimming the tree, lighting the menorah and perform other rituals peculiar to the dual celebration.

MOMENTS MUSICAL

83 members of music association attend fifth state convention

By ADAH E. JENKINS

Eighty - three members of the Maryland State Music Teachers Association from Baltimore, Cecil, Harford, Anne Arundel, Prince George and Baltimore counties and from Washington attended the fifth annual state convention at the University of Maryland in College Park.

The educational session was devoted to a panel discussion on "Teaching Musical Interpretation." Speakers were Stewart Gordon, from University of Maryland, George Steiner, George Washington University, and Justin Williams, of Peabody Conservatory.

Stanley Springer, president of the new Eastern Division of Music Teachers National Association, spoke informally at the luncheon in the University Dining Hall.

Mrs. Elizabeth R. Davis, retiring president of the Baltimore Branch, which she organized, was given an ovation at the general business meeting in the McKeldin Library. Emerson Myers of the music department at Catholic University, was elected president for the ensuing two-year period.

• • •

UNIVERSITY OF MARYLAND faculty members and students, as well as citizens from the community, swelled the audience for the afternoon recital of contemporary music by Maryland composers.

Works played were by Robert Hall Lewis, of Goucher College, Mr. Myers, George T. Jones, of Catholic University, and Esther W. Ballou from American University.

• • •

AT THE dinner meeting which closed the convention Angelo Eagon, music advisor of the United States Information Agency, spoke on "Music In Government Affairs." Under the direction of Rose Marie Grentzer, the University of Maryland Madrigal Group presented in costume, an engaging program of Renaissance music, accompanied by the harpsichord and lute.

Among those attending the convention were Mrs. Carol Blanton Diggs, former secretary of the Baltimore Branch; Mrs. Katrine White, outgoing treasurer, and your writer.

ALTHO THE press of last Sunday's concert schedule prevented your reviewer from hearing the entire concert, the portion heard at Old St. Paul's Episcopal Church, was of the usual high calibre that is maintained by the Handel Choir of Baltimore, under the direction of James Winship Lewis.

Harry Van Fossen gave to the opening aria of the Christmas portion of "Messiah" the excellent advantages of a well supported, soaring tenor, that encompassed with apparent ease the difficulties of "Every Valley Shall be Exalted".

The concert was accompanied by the organ and a small group of strings, with two trumpets. This Christmas concert marked the 75th concert of the Handel Choir's 27th season.
