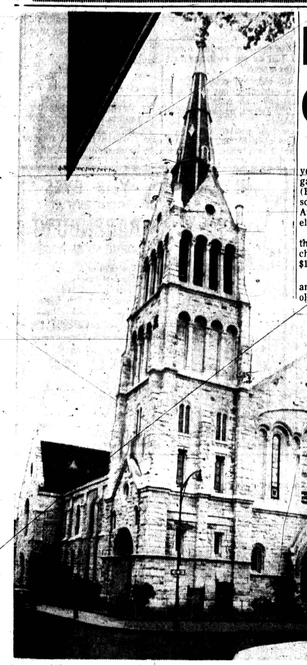
PSALM 9:1



Bethel Church was a Christmas gift to city

By JOHN JASPER

Just before Christmas 52 years ago (1910), the congregation of St. Peters Church (Episcopal) in Baltimore, sold its church at Druid Hill Ave. and Lanvale St. to Bethel AME Church for $90,000.

This was a lot of money in those days. Today many new churches cost $500,000 to $1,000,000.

St. Peters was built in 1870 and was, therefore, 40 years old when it was sold.

Change in the neighborhood made St. Peters lose members who formed the Church of the Ascension, facing Lafayette Square, and Grace Church, Monument and Park Ave.

• • •

BETHEL PAID $20,000 down and put up all its property, including the church building on East Saratoga St. and dwellings at 114 E. Center, 262 W. Biddle St., 602 Hargrove Alley, and 235 Campbell Alley, on a $70,000 mortgage which was to run 15 years.

Bethel was compelled to move because the city voted to widen Saratoga St. and condemned the church.

Bethel's membership at the time was 1,500 and the pastor was the Rev. D. G. Hill.

St. Peters congregation was small — around 100 active members — who moved their worship services to 1112 Madison Ave.

In 1912, these 100 St. Peters members met with 50 members from Grace P.E. Church and agreed to consolidate.

• • •

Bethel congregation found itself in great difficulties to meet payments on the $70,000 mortgage. It was at its wit's end after the mortgage was reduced to $33,000. The general feeling was that the congregation could raise no more payments.

It was at this point that Rev. W. Sampson Brooks, later bishop, was called to the pastorate from St. Louis.

In a dramatic $33,000 rally that stirred the whole city in 1917, the full amount was raised on one effort and the mortgage burned. No one had ever seen $33,000 at one time on one table, but there it was and it took all night to count it.

Under the present pastor, the Rev. Harrison J. Bryant, the now 91-year-old structure has been sand blasted and its glistening white marble spire is visible a long way off.

Bethel, once St. Peters (nicely landscaped), is again what its builders called "one of the most commanding and conspicuous of all churches in Baltimore."

Mahlon Oswell out of Hopkins

Mahlon Oswell, AFRO assistant business manager and credit manager was released from John Hopkins Hospital today (Friday) a month's stay, during which he underwent surgery for a back injury.

He is now in a cast and will remain at his home for about three weeks before he returns to the hospital. His family reported he was in good condition.

Mrs. Lillie Britto

Funeral services were held Tuesday from the Katie Williams Funeral Home for Mrs. Lillie Mae Britto, 46, of 1118 Division St.

Mrs. V. Daughton

Mrs. Violet Daughton, 20, of 1822 Ruxton Ave., bind for much of her life, but who nevertheless was active in church and community work, died at Provident Hospital last Thursday.

Mrs. Daughton, the former Miss Violet Fallin, was married two months ago to James Daughton, also blind.

Funeral services were held Sunday at the Morton and Dyett Funeral Home. Burial was in Stevenson AME Cemetery, Sparks, Md.

• • •

Born in Lottsburg, Va., Mrs. Daughton came to Baltimore as an infant with her Fallin who also survive her.

Mrs. Daughton attended the Maryland School for the blind, was a member of the First Baptist Church, Mt Winans, Md., until her recent marriage.

• • •

SHE THEN joined Christ Memorial Church where she played piano and was presented in several concerts.

Mrs. Daughton was also active in the Community Building program in Cherry Hill, where he read stories to a class of youngsters and played the organ.

In addition to her parents and husband, survivors are: three sisters and brothers, James Jr., Robert and Jeanie Fallin; seven aunts and three uncles.

Mrs. H. Owings

Mrs. Annie Owings, 84, of 2343 Druid Hill Ave., who was for 46 years housekeeper at Pimlico race track, was buried at St. Peter's Cemetery, wednesday.

Mrs. Owings died at her home last Friday.

The Charles A. Law Funeral Home was in charge of arrangements.

Born Jan. 30, 1877 in Baltimore, Mrs. Owings was the 17th child of the late George H. and Henrietta Brown.

After attending public schools here, Mrs. Owings began work at the Pimlico race track. She retired 15 years ago.

Survivors are a daughter, Mrs. Alice O. Carter, and a grandson, Lawrence E. Carter, a real estate salesman.

Parents urged to take more interest in schools

Techniques for developing better parent-teacher cooperation in educating today's children are described by Ernest Osborne in a new 25-cent pamphlet, YOU AND YOUR CHILD'S SCHOOL, just published by the Public Affairs Committee, 22 East 38th Street, New York 16, N.Y.

"It is a strange fact that the two groups—parents and teachers—which we should expect to find working closely together for the welfare of children so often are at odds with one another," Dr. Osborne reports.

"There are many schools where it seems to be a definite policy to 'freeze' parents out," he continues.

"School visiting is discouraged except during the so-called 'Open School Week' and then is rigidly restricted. But even in schools where there is generally a welcoming attitude, there will be a considerable number of fathers and mothers who are uneasy about having anything to do with the school."

"The challenge is a serious one," Dr. Osborne adds. "Few problems faced by the school are of more importance than that of finding a way to assure better teacher-parent cooperation. The schools need to make a real effort—so do the parents."

"Out of the wealth of experience that individual schools have accumulated during the last half century, one finds a variety of approaches. Some are simple; others call for a degree of cooperation and mutual trust that may take some time to develop."

• • •

AMONG THE well-established techniques, Dr. Osborne lists (1) visits by the teacher to the homes of her pupils, (2) regular visits by parents to the school, and (3) a regular program of conferences and clinics in which the teachers can discuss "the ways in which both home and school may be able to help the child improve his school work or better his social relationships."

"Another way in which the school might help parents," by recommending guidance books from the school library that might be lent to parents....The teacher might, in addition, suggest ways of increasing Johnny's interest in his school work and improving his cultural climate through concerts, plays, and visits to museums and historical spots."

"Most public schools are organized in such a way as to make it difficult for parents to participate actively in the school's main task of teaching and learning," Dr. Osborne admits. But he suggests that "there are communities where parents have gradually become partners of the school staff.

"Given a genuine desire on the part of both groups, parents and teacher will find among them opportunities for joint effort that will make the education of the children more deeply satisfying than it sometimes is.

"Here and there, parents have been asked by alert teachers to share some of their knowledge and skills with children. A mother who is unusually skillful in dress-making has come to the school for a few hours and helped youngsters make costumes for some production they have planned.

"Or perhaps a father who is particularly handy with tools has been invited to help the stage crew handle a particularly difficult piece of work," Dr. Osborne reports.

Similarly, "certain parents can share their hobbies with children either in an assembly program or with classroom groups. The scientist father can whet the children's interest in chemistry by presenting some simple laboratory demonstrations."

The pamphlet closes with a series of questions designed to enable the parent to examine the extent to which he is an active partner in the education of his children.

Dr. Quarles pens new work on the American Revolution

A new book, which tells the full story of the colored man's part in the American Revolution, fills a gap long left void, according to its author, Dr. Benjamin Quarles, head of the Department of American History at Morgan State.

Published last Saturday by Chapel Hill Press for the Institute of Early American History and Culture, Williamsburg, Va., the book is on display at the Enoch Pratt main Library, Calvert and Franklin Sts.

"There has not been a full-length story of the role of the colored man in the American Revolution," Dr. Quarles explains.

"And there was a story worth telling. I think the colored man is important because he served on both sides. Whoever promised him liberty, that which he was interested in, he would join that group," Dr. Quarles said.

Dr. Quarles who completed the book working on and off for three years, two summers on a Guffenhiem Fellowship at the University of Michigan, said the British used the colored man more readily than the Americans.

• • •

BOTH SIDES, he said, needed military laborers, and the colored man filled this job although the British would allow some to bear arms.

Colored men were also used on warships, generally as seaman, and on privateerships who were hired by states to prey on other ships, he said.

In his book, Dr. Quarles says he points out the states of Georgia and South Carolina refused officially to use colored persons, but they were sometimes recruited, nevertheless.

The biggest problem, Dr. Quarles explained, was in determining who was colored because most of the units were integrated.

• • •

A NOTED authority on the life of Frederick Douglass, Mr. Quarles has also authored a book on the colored man in the Civil War.

Dr. Quarles' book on Lincoln and the colored man, published by the Oxford University Press, is due out early next year.

A graduate of Shaw University, Raleigh, N.C., Dr. Quarles holds an M.A. and PH.D from the University of Wisconsin.

He has been on the staff at Morgan since 1953.

Dr. Quarles is married, and lives with his family at 2205 Southern Ave.

State board sets scholarship exams

The State Department of Education has announced plans for conducting the examination for the three State scholarship programs on Saturday, Feb. 3, 1962, for the 1962-63 scholarship awards.

In addition to the scholarships offered under the Senatorial scholarship program and under the Teacher Education scholarship program, a new program of awards known as the General State Tuition scholarships will be offered for the first time.

The General State Tuition awards were established by the 1961 session of the General Assembly.

In method of award, these new scholarships are similar to the Teacher Education grants, since the number of awards is based on the number of representatives in the Legislature and are made according to the legal residence of the candidate.

Registration forms and further information concerning the three scholarship programs will be available at all public and non-public high schools and participating colleges early in Jan.

Great decisions moves to Lemmel

Great Decisions program meets on schedule in February and March at Lemmel Junior High School instead of the Baltimore Junior College, it was announced by Frank Fairbank, history supervisor.

Scheduled discussions will be announced later.

More room at the Lemmel School will allow more than 1100 persons to attend, according to Lemmel's vice principal, W. Norris Wels.

The number was previously restricted to 150 at the college.

The Great Decisions program is sponsored by the adult divisions of the Baltimore Public Schools, the Baltimore Junior College, the Great Decisions Committee of Baltimore and the United Nations Associations of Maryland.

Johnson High reopens library

Teachers at the Harvey Johnson Junior High School, have volunteered to reactivate the school's library program.

The school has been without the services of a librarian for over a year and the available library facilities have been unused.

No librarian was assigned to the school, because of its enrollment, inadequate space, and shortage of school librarians.

Although the physical plant, itself is small, the library contains more than 2,000 volumes. It was the consensus of opinion that any time used to stimulate the use of these volumes would be very valuable in terms of improved pupil performance. A committee of teachers now devote one non-teaching period weekly, and some after school time, assisting and directing pupils in using library materials.

The teachers helping with this program are: Mrs. Alma Gladden, Mrs. Otyce Froe, Miss Laura McDaniel, Miss Jennye Thomas, Mrs. Lorraine T. Green and Mrs. Inez Martin.

Youths to discuss family relations

The City-Wide Youth Forum meets Jan. 5 at 7 p.m. at the Madison Avenue YWCA to discuss "The Teenager and His Family."

A panel of high school pupils, including Melvin Ashe and Betty Brown of Dunbar High; Sandra Bandfield of Forest Park and David Williams of Carver, will discuss the problem with Dr. Clifton Jones of the department of sociology at Morgan State College.

Andrie Hill of Western will preside.

The forum is sponsored jointly by the YWCA, the YMCA, the Me-De-So Wives and the Baltimore Urban League.
