Customs relaxed, bride may choose white or color for wedding attire

While customs have relaxed and brides have, with perfect social sanction, w i d e choice of wedding attire, it seems proper that the young bride should choose white.

Choose white because t.h e young bride is the only one that can properly wear the white dress and veil. Older brides, even in first marriages seldom select the formal trappings.

* * *

THE WEDDING dress may be of any white material — depending upon the time of year the wedding is held.

It may be of satin, brocade, velvet, chiffon, lace or t h e new man - made materials. It may be elaborately embroidered with pearls, crystals or silver; or it may be as plain as a slip - cover. It may be anything, in fact, that the bride fancies, and may be made in whatever fashion or period she chooses.

The veil, of course, is another matter. It is usually of lace or tulle or a combination of the two. Variety here is in manner of arrangement and how it is mounted.

* * *

YOUNG BRIDES m a y choose a color other than white. Cloth of silver, very deep cream, faint pink and blue that is so pale as to be near white are accepted colors. Heavier colors, such as cloth of gold, suggest the habilment of a previous marriage rather than that of a virgin maid — of whom the white and orange blossoms are the emblems.

If a bride chooses to be married in traveling dress, she has no bridesmaids, though she often has a maid or matron of honor. In this instance she would select a type of dress that she could wear directly to the train, plane or ship . . . . whatever she would "wear away" after a big formal wedding.

If short gloves are worn, she merely pulls the glove off at the altar, but if she wears elbow length or longer evening gloves, usually the under seam of the ring finger of the glove is ripped f o r about two inches and the bride need only pull the tip off to have the ring put on.

* * *

THE BRIDE should decide the costumes of the brides maids , slippers, stockings, dresses, bouquets, gloves and hats, etc. without considering or consulting taste or preferences of the attendants.

This rule is important to note. On occasion a bride will try to consult attendants and it usually turns out that six bridesmaids have six separate ideas.

The bridesmaids are always dressed exactly alike as of texture of materials and model of making, but sometimes their dresses differ in color. The dress of the honor attendant never precisely matches that of the bridesmaids, through it is usually similar but reversed in color.

The bride must keep under consideration, however, the costs of bridesmaids' ensemble, since the attendants pay for them. The bride pays for the flowers they carry.

* * *

NO MATTER how small the wedding, the bridegroom always has a best man. This, to indicate good family relations, is usually the bridegroom's brother. Next in line would be his intimate friend, or if the choice here is difficult, the brother of the bride.

For a formal wedding the bridegroom and best m a n wear morning coats, dark gray - striped trousers, formal - hand cravats. At many smart weddings today, t h e men of the wedding party wear black silk bow ties.

White buckskin gloves are smartest, but if the bridegroom prefers gray suede, they should be a slight a gray as possible. Especially well-dressed bridegrooms have the soles of their shoes blackened with waterproof polish so that when they kneel, their shoes look dark and neat.

* * *

IN LESS formal weddings the ushers, etc. may wear dark blue suits, white accessories, white boutonnieres and no gloves. For small summer weddings, white flannel trousers, blue or gray dress coats, may be worn. There is, of course, the special military regalia, which is a rule unto itself.

* * *

A WHITE bridal dress and veil, the garden - party effect of bridesmaids' clothes, and the formal black and white of the men of the bridal party is still and must ever be the perfect picture.

But it is essential that a compromise be made between the two unreasonable conventions of tradition and situation of the young women who cannot afford the extravagance of bridal array.

A wedding which is truly beautiful can still be achieved with a bride in everyday clothes, if they have in any way a bride - like effect.

The bride might choose a lovely frock of white, or suitable color, a flower hat with mesh veiling around it, and a garden bouquet.

* * *

IF THE WEDDING is to be in church, organ music, at least, should be provided and decorations . for the altar used.

There should be ushers, but not in cutaway coats, but in informal wear. It would be well to have the bridesmaid's ensembles repeat that of the bride, but not in color.

Banquet, dance mark Chi Delta Founder's Day

The Chi Delta Mu Fraternity celebrated its 49th observance of Founders' Day at a closed banquet for members and wives at the Belvedere-Sheraton Inn last Saturday evening.

Dr. Dwight O. W. Holmes, senior citizen and President-Emeritus of Morgan State College, was guest speaker. Dr. Holmes was a classmate and long-time friend of one of the founders, the late Dr. J. C. Terry.

Dr. H. P. Hughes, president of the local chapter, presided. Doctors Lionel Debordes and Edward McDaniels, chairmen of program and entertainment committees respectively, arranged the affair.

Mrs. D. O. W. Holmes was presented a corsage of American Beauty Roses which highlighted her outfit, a two-piece moss green dress featuring the latest in overblouses.

* * *

AFTER THE BANQUET, the fraternity received invited guests for cocktails, buffet, and dancing until wee hours in the morning. Music, A.C.C. Orchestra, Harlan Oingess, leader, provided the music for high style dancing, from conservative to the latest dance craze.

A fashion show could not have produced fashions more lovely than those worn by the ladies.

Mrs. Charles Davidson looked very chic in a white crepe sheath and lace, elegingly dipped in front and back. Mrs. Bernard Christmas Sr., stunning in black with a back interest and with a peek-a-boo bodice of white alence lace under black chiffon. Mesdames John Braxton and Richard Hunt were very stylish in the prettiest blue lace dresses around town. The former was a tiered sheath and the latter with a Dior flare.

Mrs. Clarice Davis looked most charming in an original bronze satin and gold brocade, featuring the full skirt and bare back. Mrs. Bernard White, in cute as a kitten, in a black wool sheath outlined in the right places with black satin.

* * *

MRS. CLARENCE REYNOLD, president of Chi Wives, wore a fitted, sleeveless, orange multicolored frock with matching shoes. Mrs. Nelson Williams chose a black taffeta and lace, form fitting skirt with a "pouf" of black lace flowing from the waist at the back, lace peeping from the scalloped neckline.

Mrs. Bernard Christmas Jr. in red pie de sol molded to her every curve, with a very interesting flounce of heavy deep shirring, matching shoes and the cutiest rose hat perched upon her tresses. Mrs. Dennis Tribble selected a gold and black full skirted print with insets of accordion pleats, and gold accessories.

* * *

"She's Engaged"

By Ida M. Smith

DO'S AND DON'TS FOR BRIDES-TO-BE

THE BRIDE'S CHECKLIST THREE MONTHS BEFORE THE WEDDING

(√) Announce your engagement in the AFRO.

The bride's parents send the notice of engagement. Be sure to include full information. Use this form.

Mr. and Mrs.——— address ——— have announced the engagement of their daughter ——— to Mrs. ———, son of Mr. and ———.

You may include maternal and paternal grandparents, schools, —clubs, sororities, fraternities etc.

The wedding is planned for ———, 1962, at ———.

(√) Decide whether your wedding will be formal or informal and where the wedding will take place.

Your family should help you decide where your wedding is to be and just how much money you will spend since all your wedding expenses must be paid for by your parents. The gown you wear, the number of attendants, and the time of day determine the degree of formality for the wedding party.

(√) Decide what time of day will be best for the ceremony.

Religion, climate and local custom may be important factors as well as plans for the wedding trip in Baltimore, the high noon and the afternoon wedding is popular in the spring and summer. In hot weather, many brides choose after - dark to escape the heat.

(√) Set the wedding date. Call on your clergyman with your fiance. Before marrying couples, many clergymen insist on talking with them about their plans for their life together, their aims etc. Usually, the church secretary will reserve the church, organist, and sexton for the day of your wedding and for your rehearsal. She will also advise you as to the seating capacity of the church and any other special rules.

(√) Draw up your invitation list.

Invitations to a large church wedding are never limited, no matter how large the number may be or whether the guests will be present or not. But if the reception and/or the church list must be limited, the bride and her mother must tell the groom and his family how many guests they must invite.

(The bride's family bears the financial responsibility for both the wedding and the reception and are entitled to a larger proportion of the guest list.) The list your groom and his family give you should indicate which persons are to be invited to the ceremony and reception and which are to receive announcements only.

If you plan to invite everyone to both wedding and reception, only one master list is necessary. You will need a second list if some people are invited to the ceremony only. Indicate the people who are to be seated in reserved pews and notify the church secretary how many pews you will need. If you plan to send announcements, you will need a third list.

Don't invite people that you don't really know; never pay off social obligations at your reception.

Enter the names on your various lists in a card file, designating each guest as to reception, wedding only, or announcement. This makes checkoff acceptances easy and will be a useful reference list.
