Calls upon state to use majesty of law for good

Archbishop Lawrence J. Shehan of the Baltimore Archdiocese, reiterated his support of open housing legislation.

In a [illegible] Shehan called upon the state to use the majesty of the law in the service of human dignity and to permit it to be accomodated to the wishes of those who would be against that law if it invoked against them.

His statement came in the need for a public accommodations law follows:

LATER THIS week (Tuesday) Maryland General Assembly convenes in special session to consider the enactment of equal public accommodations laws. The purpose of such laws is to provide all persons with equal opportunities to satisfy fundamental human needs as and when they arise.
