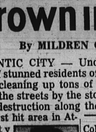
City smothered in mud, seaweed 6 drown in Dover

By MILDREN O'NEILL

ATLANTIC CITY — Under cloudy dismal skies hundreds of stunned residents of the Inlet section started the job of cleaning up tons of mud, sand and seaweed dumped in the streets by the storm and flood, which left death and destruction along the Jersey coastline.

The hardest hit area in Atlantic City was the colored area, which is the Inlet section where three men were found dead in flooded streets which were under five and six feet of water.



MISS O'NEIL

I could hardly believe my eyes by the sight which greeted me when I arrived on Friday.

THE SEAWEED was everywhere, knee-deep in the street —inside cars — in the houses and stores — hanging out of mail boxes.

Children were shoveling the seaweed into piles. Workmen were piling it into trucks.

It was as though the seaweed had fallen from the sky.

I hope I never see any more seaweed in life.

The high tide was worse than any during the hurricane of 1944 in the five-block area of the Inlet.

THE THREE men found dead in the flooded streets were the only casualties in Atlantic City.

They were: Clarence H. Brown, 60, of 90 Levin Place—trapped in his car on flooded Absecon Blvd.

Police could not reach him because of high water.

A high - bodied National Guard truck was summoned.

Brown was dead on arrival at Atlantic City Hospital.

The body of George Brown, 60, of 401 N. Delaware Ave. (no relation) was found floating at the intersection of S. Carolina and Baltic Aves., by Patrolman Wesley Hakins.

The body of Memmit C. Colding, 60, of W. California Ave., Absecon, was found floating under an automobile at the intersection of Delaware and Baltic Aves., by Patrolman William Shepperson Jr.

DURING THE evacuation ten families were removed from one block on Dewey Place in the Inlet section and soon afterward two houses collapsed.

Groups of men, women and children, with stunned and expressionless faces, were trying to clear the debris - littered streets which was sand, seaweed and sections of the boardwalk.

At Delaware and Baltic Aves. where a body was found, the water was still knee deep.

The basements of stores and h uses were still flooded with at least seven feet of water.

A SECTION of the boardwalk which was about nine feet by 12 was lying on New Hampshire Ave.

All of the stores were closed —the owners trying to clean up the mud left inside by the flood.

People examined their cars which were completely ruined and shook their heads in disbelief.

"Our cars were completely covered by the water," they said. "the salt water," they added.

"WE'RE ALL dazed," said Mrs. Berzenia Jones, 33, of 102 Inlet Ave., which is one-half block from the ocean.

"The frustration, hardship and worry connected with this flood — I just can't believe that it has happened or could happen," Mrs. Jones said.

"My furniture is ruined. "Just look at it."

The ugly water marks were two feet high on the first-floor.

"I don't have any insurance — I mean insurance doesn't cover ocean damage."

It was hard trying to walk because of the knee - deep seaweed which also had a horrible odor.

SECTIONS of the boardwalk which was reduced to splinters also littered the streets making walking dangerous.

The sight was hard to believe.

Schools were closed so children with shovels were piling the seaweed along the sides of the streets — making it possible for cars to pass.

WILLIAM HENRY REEVES, of 136 Hurton Pl., a barber, at Smitties Barber Shop, 411 New Hampshire Ave., was trying to clean the mud from the shop which was two-inches deep.

"I just can't believe it happened.

"We only had a little rain and then the water started rising.

"I'm trying to clean up so we can open soon.

"Can you imagine it — the water was up to the arm of the barber shair."

MRS. REBECCA BROCKINGTON, 62, of 702 Lexington Ave., said: "I could hear the water swirling around the house Tuesday night. A sound I hope I never hear again.

"My husband, Hillard, who has lived here 40 years said he has never seen anything like this."

On the boardwalk —I shivered — when I heard the roar of the ocean and secretly prayed that Hanks, the photographer, and I would be finished our assignment before dark.

The Steel Pier was completely cut in half. The entire middle section was swept away.

Sections of the boardwalk had been washed away and three other children, but was overcomed with grief when asked to give their names and ages.

MRS. REYNOLDS said the accident occurred while she went across the street to borrow bleach from a neighbor who also lived in the 800 block Shuter St., a few blocks from the hospital.

"My husband was with her when I left and said he would stay there until I got back," the mother said tearfully.

Mrs. Reynolds said her husband, Matthew Reynolds, a hotel cook, left the shortly after she did.

Little Adena's clothing caught fire from a laundry heater while she was alone, the mother said.

Frightened by the flames the young victim ran from the house, fanning the fire as she ran.

the beach was piled high with debris.

STROLLING THE boardwalk were the curiousity seekers.

They carried cameras and focused their attention on the Steel Pier.

The Steel Pier trucks cruised the boardwalk stopping here and there so crews could scramble to the beach and pick up pier - parts.

I talked to a man who called himself a 'beachcomber.'

He had a mine detector combing the beach at Kentucky Ave.

The 'beachcomber' claimed to have located "four or five bucks" in three hours.

Old - timers along the boardwalk pointed out a group of 100 sea gulls in the gully section of the ocean.

"Looks like the strippers are feeding in close," they said.

BOARDWALK STORE owners were equally dazed — talking about their losses.

They had hopes of opening before the summer season.

"God and the bank willing," they said.

Many residents were debating the question of the comparative destructiveness of the hurricane of 1944 and last week's storm.

The devastation wrought by each was momentous.

A proprietor of a Boardwalk store said "The hardships and heartbreak of being without power and heat for considerable lengths of time, or worse yet, of seeing one's home damaged, undermined or swept away are things that weigh heavily on all."

The general attitude was that "No matter how bad things are, there is a tendency to console oneself with the thought they might have been worse."

Mrs. Juanita Hurd buried Tuesday

Funeral services were held Tuesday at Sharp Street Methodist Church for Mrs. Juanita Hurd, 65, 3708 Fairview Ave. She died Friday at the home of her daughter.

The Rev. Edward G. Carroll presided at the services.

Mrs. Willard A. Williams was at the organ. Arlington S. Phillips, was funeral director.

Mrs. Hurd was born July 24, 1897 in Greensville, Tenn., the daughter of the late Catherine and Alexander Alums.

Her early education was in the Greensville public schools. She belonged to John Wesley Methodist Church in the Tennessee city.

In 1950, she was married to Paul A. Hurd of Whitehall, Tenn.

THE COUPLE came to Baltimore when he became ill and was required to enter a government hospital. He died in 1932.

Mrs. Hurd worked to keep the family going until 1960, when she became ill.

She was at first a member of Metropolitan Methodist Church where it was located on Orchard St., and later joined Sharp Street.

She served as secretary of the Early Class Meetings and was a member of the Nazarites, the Morning Glories, the Ladies Auxiliary to the Men's Benefical Association, the Good Hope, Ideals, Household of Ruth Knights of Pythias Lodges.

She also served as secretary of the trustees board of the Mt. Olive Benefit Society No. 8.

Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. Louise Maddox, Mrs. Arnetta Gross; four sisters, Mesdames Inez Rutledge, Mary Henderson, Una Ellis, Urna Washington; a brother, Thomas Alum, six grandchildren and four great grandchildren.

ONE OF THE experts, Dr. Ilhan Mutlu, staff psychiatrist in the outpatient clinic for Crownsville State Hospital points to the number of cases with which he is frequently faced in which a child has built up a hostility against the parent.

"If a child is predisposed toward neurosis or psychosis, then such lack of trust in their abilities to withstand the stress of life can lead to a more serious condition," he said.

Dr. Mutlu said that discipline of a child is necessary and good, but added that the adolescent must realize that he is personally respected, and is given certain freedoms as proof of that respect and trust.

THIS IS basically the sentiment expressed from another field of counseling, by the Rev. Harrison J. Bryant, pastor of Bethel AME Church.

But the Rev. Mr. Harrison, himself the father of a grown daughter and a son, and two teenagers, cautions that thrusting too much responsibility on the child is just as bad.

"I don't think it is safe to go too far — leaving everything to the judgement of the child, who is limited in his experience. It is necessary that we guide him in the way that he should go.

"A child needs help in making the decisions which affect his future — decisions for which he has not the proper experience to make for himself," the minister said.

HE RE - EMPHASIZED however, that it is necessary to trust the child in the "vital areas of life. "Decisions are not made for him, but with him," he added.

The minister, who would probably be categorized as a "liberal - conservative" parent, indicated that he feels that the lessening of parental control is the cause of a great many of the evils in today's society.

"There was less juvenile delinquency, less crime, when parents were more strict on their children, and used the rod occasionally, he reminisced.

He said he feels that the fault is partly that of the courts, which he says too frequently intervenes when a child is being disciplined.

He pointed to a case in which an 18 - year - old girl took her father to court, when he punished her for coming in past the 12 midnight curfew he had set. The court sided with the girl.

"There was no brutality involved here. Merely a case of a parent disciplining his ward," the minister asserted.

He added that "when you give the child the impression that you do have confidence in him, that you do trust him, as a rule that trust will be returned and the child will live up to your expectations, and disciplining becomes less necessary."

VERNON W. SPARKS, chief psychologist at Crownsville's Out - patient clinic supports the theory of giving teenagers more freedom but underlines that the responsibilities must be equal to their abilities.

"We must be able to give them some realistic responsibilities, but it must meet their abilities and stage of maturity. Otherwise they will be frustrated by expecting to measure up to standards of conduct beyond their attainment," he reasoned.

He said parents must be careful that their own anxieties do not permeate and reflect in their treatment of their children, but this is most often the case.

Another person who has come in contact with teenagers, Municipal Court Judge Robert B. Watts, believes that too rigid parental controls reflected in a distrust of a child's judgement, often leads to juvenile delinquency.

"Sometimes a child will commit a crime merely because he knows his parents believe him to be criminally bent anyway. He merely substantiates their suspicion," the judge said.

A PROMINENT psychiatrist writing for the Current Medical Digest postulates that it is difficult for a child to "grow up healthy when he lives under suspicion."

He says it is not enough to attempt to "give the impression" that one trusts one's maturing offspring.

"Faith in a child is not something that the parent can assume by design or calculation. It cannot be simulated.

"It must be genuine and sincere . . .

He must know from the beginning that his parents love him and trust the vital areas of life."
