'Harold bows here Mon. before going to Broadway

WASHINGTON

Anthony Perkins, who will star as "Harold," coming to the National Theatre on November 5, calls Herman Raucher's comedy, the play "I've been waiting for."

For the star of such celluloid editions as "Psycho," "On The Beach," "Friendly Persuasion," "Goodbye Again," "Desire Under The Elms," the forthcoming "The Trial," and "Phaedra," and Broadway's "Look Homeward Angel," and "Greenwillow," will be appearing in his first comedy role with the new story of a young man whose friends help him achieve his life's ambition — courting the "perfect" girl.

Producer Saint-Subber, heretofore represented by such outstanding offerings as "Kiss Me, Kate," "My Three Angels," "The Dark at the Top of the Stairs" and "The Tenth Man," has engaged Larry Blyden to direct "Harold."

Known principally as an actor, the romantic comedy marks Blyden's first directorial effort.

Rehearsals have begun with Anthony Perkins and the supporting cast which includes Don Adams, whose antics have frequently been observed on the Perry Como TV show, Nathaniel Frey, long a Broadway favorite and recently featured in "Fiorello," Arthur Batanides, Rochelle Oliver, whose last stage assignment was Jason Robards Jr.'s wife in "Toys in The Attic," Sudie Bond, Joe E. Marks, Sidney Armus, Stephen Cheng and Miss Joey Heatherton as "the girl."

Ben Edwards will design the settings and the lighting; Frank Thompson will create the costumes.

Edwards and Wigwam Productions will be associated with Mr. Saint-Subber in the presentation of "Harold."

One of Broadway's leading scene designers, Ben Edwards made his managerial debut two years ago with "Big Fish, Little Fish."

• • •

"HAROLD" WILL be a Theatre Guild subscription attraction.

The comedy will remain at the National Theatre for three weeks, through November 24.

Thereafter, the company will travel to New York for the Broadway premiere at the Longacre Theatre on November 29.

Arena Stage revives 'Once in a Lifetime'

WASHINGTON

By LOUISE DAVIS STONE

It turns out that the Arena Stage Theatre's ONCE IN A LIFETIME" was a historical dividend, not a hysterical dividend.

It should have been both.

It's your guess as to why the Arena chose "Once in a Lifetime" as its opener for what promises to be an exciting season.

One continuous smile is all that I could muster with an occasional funny bone twist in this atmosphere of Hollywood gone mad with the advent of the talkies.

The sizzle of this Hart/Kaufman plan has disappeared into a rather plodding production.

The costumes, however, make for one bright light during the evening. The validity of the satire still holds in many areas, though the script is dated in parts.

The hero of the evening was Alan Oppenheimer as the writer-without-work Lawrence Vail.

His heroism went lengths I did not expect and had I anticipated his courageous act, I might have remained in the lobby. He takes an egg out of his pocket and cracks it into an ashtray, seasons it, swishes it around and then drinks it.

George Lewis (Rene Auberjonois), May Daniels (Geneva Bugbee) and Jerry Hyland (Roy R. Scheider), tired vaudeville hacks decide that Hollywood, now that sound is an institution, is at the end of the rainbow.

MUSICAL MOMENTS

George Sterling scores in concert

By ADAH K. JENKINS

Bravos punctuated the tumultuous applause accorded George I. Stirling, Metropolitan Opera tenor, at his Baltimore debut for the opening concert of the Jewish Community Center Series.

Having become somewhat accustomed to our outstanding lyric tenors, Mr. Shirley's Caruso - like power and range was a rewarding surprise.

He was served admirably with the imaginative accompaniments provided by Charles Wadsworth.

At the conclusion of the concert, Mrs. Joseph Sherbow, chairman of the JCC Music Committee and a group of hostesses entertained at an informal reception for the singer, in the Center hall.

• • •

THE ARTISTIC elegance of French musicianship was given a virtuoso display by Robert Casadesus, pianist, with the Baltimore Symphony's second pair of concerts.

Benny Goodman will be the soloist at the November 6-7 pair of Baltimore Symphony concerts.

• • •

EDNA LOFTON, former Baltimore soprano, now studying in New York, presented a recital recently at the new St. Paul United Holy Church, 1330 N. Calhoun St.

Miss Lofton gave an interesting array of religious works.

The Handel aria "Bright Seraphims", with its display of elaborate runs, was well suited to the trumpet - like clarity of the soloist's voice.

Her low register is also well supported and rich in quality.

The program was enhanced by the excellent accompaniments of Sophie W. Johnson, also a Baltimorean.

• • •

GEGORY SHNERT, director of Missouri Human Rights Commission has reported there has been significant progress in fair employment in the state during 1962 — noting only 26 complaints had been filed during the year.

Crisis kills bomb shelter jimcrow in New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS — (ANP) — An improvement in race relations came last week when the Office of Civilian Defense announced there would be no racial distinctions made in the activities of the office of civilian defense. This means that there will be no segregated bomb shelters.

This city is one of the likely targets for missiles launched from Cuba.
