Interior appointment draws Veep's praise

RELATIVES OF U.S. Army Major Norman E. Parker, 44 are shown as they entered Baltimore's Madison St. Presbyterian Church for funeral rites. Major Parker died unexpectedly in Ingrandes, France on Oct. 14. Pictured, left to right, son, Norman Jr., 6; the widow, the former Miss Eugenia Hardy, onetime Baltimore teacher; his brother, Police Detective Lt. University.

WASHINGTON — Stating that "this is a very proud moment for the nation," Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson this week administered the oath of office to Lewis S. Flagg, attorney, who has been appointed Associate Solicitor for the Department of the Interior.

Mr. Flagg, son of Judge Lewis S. Flagg Jr., of the Civic Court of New York City, studied political science at Howard University in Washington and was graduated from the Brooklyn Law School in 1948.

In his $16,999-a-year position at the Department of the Interior, Mr. Flagg, Vice President Johnson said, assumes responsibility in "one of the top legal jobs in Government."

He said employment of colored persons in important posts in the Federal Government had increased 33 percent in the $6,675 to $20,000-a-year bracket under the Kennedy Administration.

"THIS SAYS to the people of this Department, the people in other agencies of Government and the people of the world that this Administration under leadership of the President is going to see to it—and really means business—that equal opportunity to all of our citizens is assured," the Vice President said.

Secretary of the Interior Stewart L. Udall, who named Mr. Flagg to his post and joined with Vice President Johnson in the swearing in ceremony, told Mr. Flagg he was "certain that you will accept these new responsibilities with the same distinction that you served this country in time of war."

Mr. Flagg rose from private to lieutenant during World War II, and won the Bronze Star and Purple Heart during combat duty in the European, African and Middle East Theaters.

In addition to private legal practice, he served from 1951 to 1954 as assistant U.S. Attorney in New York.

As Associate Solicitor in the Department of the Interior, he will head a staff of 10 attorneys and will be responsible for the functions of six regional solicitors.

He is a member of the Federal Bar Association, the American Legion, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity and other organizations.

Kennedy greets Uganda head despite Cuba crisis pressure

WASHINGTON — Despite the pressures of an explosive world situation in which the destiny of the United States was at stake, President Kennedy took time out Monday to personally greet Prime Minister A. Milton Obote of Uganda.

The head of the newly emerging African state, which celebrated its independence Oct. 8 - 9, arrived here from New York for what was described as a "working visit."

Mr. Obote was welcomed at the airport by G. Mennen Williams, Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs and U.S. Chief of Protocol Angier Biddle Duke, when Secretary of State Dean Rusk cancelled out because of high level talks then in progress at the White House.

LATER, Mr. Obote met briefly with President Kennedy, who kept the scheduled afternoon appointment in spite of an emergency meeting of the Cabinet on the crisis created by developments in Cuba.

After the meeting, the Prime Minister held an informal press conference at Blair House, official state residence for visiting dignitaries.

Mr. Obote said Uganda's most pressing needs stemmed from a desire to unite the country's education level and the living standards of his 6,682,000 people, who occupy a 93,981-square-mile area astride the Equator in central East Africa.

THE COUNTRY is bounded on the east by Kenya, on the south by Tanganyika, on the west by the Congo, and on the north by the Sudan. It was scheduled for formal admission as the 110th member of the United Nations on Oct. 25.

The 37 - year - old head of state was sharply critical of British policy in the Central African Federal, which he said was "40 years out of date," and gave the opinion that the role of African states should be concentrated more on peace than on "reaching the moon."

Mr. Obote said his country had run into economical difficulties in recent years, but hopes to fill a gap of about 20 million pounds ($56 million) in a current five - year development program.

Daisy Bates still fighting

By ROSEMARIE TYLER

A stone crashed through the window, just missing its victim by inches. Tied to the rock was a note, "stone this time. Dynamite next."

This was a prelude on one of the South's most infamous battles for desegregation. The time was September, 1957. The place was Little Rock, Ark.

Shortly after the rock was thrown, the entire world knew the victim was Daisy Bates who was then state president of the NAACP.

MRS. DAISY BATES

IN TOWN to publicize her new book, "The Long Shadow of Little Rock," Mrs. Bates was looking slim and lovely as she reviewed the Little Rock incident.

Much has happened since the nine children walked the lonely path to Central High School amidst the screaming jeering hysterical crowd.

"And much has to be done in Little Rock even now," Mrs. Bates said as she explained that the Little Rock Board of Education still does not allow integrated school activities.

On the plus side several of the school districts have been integrated with little fuss.

ACTUALLY, Little Rock was a point of political expediency for the governor. He always said he will integrate if the people want it, which sought of gives him an out, you know," she said of the philosophy of Orville Faubus.

"The state's his you know," she continued, "but I think he wants to change his national image."

Whether the governor himself has changed remains an issue, but Mrs. Bates was more hopeful when she pointed out that the White Citizens Council while still a part of the Little Rock scene was no longer "heroes anymore."

Many people have wondered why Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Bates have remained in Little Rock.

Certainly, their personal fortunes have crashed since losing their weekly paper, the State Press.

HAVE THERE been no job offers? and what is Mr. Bates doing?

With an easy smile, and a determined gleam in her eyes, she said, "I shall not leave Little Rock until every one of those nine children have graduated. There are two of them left.

"L. C. is working as field secretary for the state NAACP while I have been working on my book in New York. We have received many offers, many from personal friends.

"In the meantime, we will stay. In fact, when I leave to help plan for a state NAACP meeting on Nov. 17 and 18, I am no longer a state officer, but I am on the national board."

She talked as she slipped into a beige Chanel suit with a deep brown print blouse during the interview in a downtown hotel.

AS TO the famous picture of Mrs. Bates shaking hands with the Governor, she disclaims this as a newspaper seeing experience . . . the gimmick. The original photo showed her shaking hands with him, but included in the photo was a state department guest from the West Indies.

"You know, the State Department called — Bill Haddad, asked would I arrange to show this Mr. Richardson from the West Indies around in Little Rock.

"He was to receive the Arkansas Travel Certificate, which had never been given to a colored person before.

"I called the governor's office, asked for the honorary certificate and said joking-ly, "don't have the janitor present it."

To Mrs. Bates' surprise, Governor Faubus got out of his sick bed, came to the office and made a personal presentation.

The camera flashed as the governor walked in, greeted her with a handshake and, "Good morning, Mrs. Bates."

BY THE time the picture appeared in Moral Rearmament publication, in Europe first, the guest from the West Indies had been cut off and only she remained shaking hands with the governor.

Said Mrs. Bates, "I have never been a member of MRA. I have friends who are, but it is not for me."

She continued, "I do not hate Faubus. I hate what he stands for."

TALKING ABOUT her book, she found the Little Rock story easier to write in New York than at home.

Her perspective was clear but it was necessary to force her mind to recall some of the horror attached to those searing experiences . . . the hatred, the suicides, the fears.

"Basically, it took real discipline to make myself sit down and write. Once I did this, the flow came easy," she said.

Accused of appearing to be bitter in some of the book reviews: she said.

Truth for bitterness. I knew "Sometimes, we mistake truth for bitterness. I knew it would be called bitter by many. Why must we always laugh, and remain friendly be the ones to smile, and laugh, and remain friendly . . . as we are kicked?"

Capital Heartbeat

Berkley Burrell, a prophet without honor in his own city

"But Jesus said unto them, A prophet is not without honour save in his own country, and in his own house." (Matt. 13:57).

And if anybody is repeating that phrase to himself these days, it's Berkely Burrell, newly elected president of the National Business League.

The D.C. Chamber of Commerce which is a member of the Business League had voted to support Atty. Belford Lawson (who would have made an excellent president) for the position.

But, lo and behold, Burrell made it.

So, at the dinner this past Saturday evening, not only was Burrell not on the dais, he wasn't even there. He wasn't honored as one of the city's outstanding business men, he wasn't asked to speak, and in short, the question was, "Where is Burrell?"

Burrell, immediately resigned his presidency of the D.C. Chamber when he was elected president of the League, but the Chamber members are still unhappy about the turn of events.

Their complete snub of Mr. Burrell is more than adequate proof of their disenchantment.

NIGERIA'S PEACE CORPS director, Dr. Samuel Proctor, will be touring back in a few months.

Top boss Sargent Shriver, is trying to locate something for him back here because the rest of the staff in Washington — as well as a few folks in Nigeria — are unhappy about his performance.

Proctor has been negotiating for a job in New York City which would make him an administrator of a youth program and simultaneously a pastor of the church. And a congressman is involved. Guess who.

AID'S BOB KITCHEN's speech at the D. C. Chamber dinner was brilliant. Kitchen is waging a one-man battle against the racists in the AID program. While Administrator Hamilton is at least committed to the idea of fair hiring and promotion, his deputy administrator wants no part of integration. One more way in which the underlings scuttle fair employment efforts in the U.S. government.

LEWIS FLAGG, just appointed associate solicitor in the Department of Interior, is a small step toward integrating that terribly lily-white department. Interior, like Agriculture, has always been a nest of anti - colored sentiments.

COMMUNICATION is something colored leaders in the community have not been doing recently. And the unfortunate hassles have been the result.

In the same five year period 6,500 personnel were recruited in Britain, chiefly for medical staff, to work in developing countries on a short-term basis.

The majority of 60,000 students studying are from the developing countries, including some 9,000 technical trainees from private industry overseas, he said.

Court Voids Pupil Policy

Tells 2 Va. schools to admit 15 youths

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — City officials agreed this week to admit 15 students to two all - white elementary schools here after Chief Justice Earl Warren refused to stay a U.S. Circuit order calling for their enrollment.

The original order was issued in Richmond last month after the Circuit Court of Appeals ruled as discriminatory a key portion of the Charlottesville pupil assignment plan.

Under the plan, the city was divided into geographical districts, each having its own elementary school. The plan allowed pupils to transfer from schools where their race was in the minority.

The Circuit Court, in rendering its decision last month, said this transfer provision was "discriminatory" and retarded integration. The 15 students were then ordered admitted to Venable and Johnson Elementary Schools.

AT THE HIGHER education level, in Laurel, Miss., Dr. William D. McCain, president of Southern Mississippi University, said integration would bring no rioting to his campus.

He told an alumni meeting Wednesday ". . . if I get my back to the wall, I want to ask you and all friends of the University to stay off the campus and trust me to handle it."

And in Macon, Ga., Mercer University trustees, at the request of President Rufus Harris, voted unanimously to appoint a special committee to study the possibility of admitting non - whites to the Baptist school.

Dr. Harris asked that the committee "study the matter . . . and report its recommendations at a later meeting . . . in the course of the school year." The board of trustees has two more meetings, in January and in June.

AT THE University of Texas in Austin, a new student group this week bared plans to seek complete integration on the campus, which has been partially integrated since 1950. The school now has some 270 colored students among 21,390.

The group said it seeks by peaceful means to integrate dormitories, student employment facilities, inter-collegiate athletics, the band and beauty queen contests and other phases of university life.

A group spokesman, Jo Frances Lee of Houston, said the students have "the blessings and guidance" of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., and expect to have him or a personal representative visit the campus.

FURTHER U.S. District Court hearings in the Powhatan (Va.) school integration case have been deferred until a related case has been heard in Richmond Circuit Court.

In the circuit court action, the Powhatan School Board is suing the State Pupil Placement Board to determine how far it must go in defining the authenticity of pupil transfer application field on non-official forms.

THE PARENTS of 14 children, who have been boycotting Junior High School 141 in Astoria (Queens) N.Y. in a zoning dispute, were ordered Friday to send their children to the school immediately.

Family Court Judge Peter M. Horn issued the order to the parents whom he had previously found guilty of neglect in keeping the youths out of school. The parents charged education officials laid out zoning lines on a racial basis.

The parents have sought federal court action to stay the order and filed a suit charging the Education Board with operating segregated schools. Parents of 10 other children have been ordered to appear in Family Court Wednesday.

THE BUFFALO BOARD asked by the NAACP to "fulfill its educational and legal responsibilities" by reorganizing the entire school system in order to provide maximum desegregation in the elementary and secondary schools."

In a comprehensive written statement to the Board, the NAACP specifically urged the school board "(1) to adopt officially a policy which recognizes the educational undesirability of de-facto segregated schools and is committed to eliminating segregation to the fullest extent possible;

(2) to formulate and implement a plan to achieve maximum desegregation throughout the school system no later than September, 1963; and (3) to ensure that the zoning and feeder patterns of the new junior high schools will provide maximum desegregation."

ONLY BOOKS which give adequate coverage to colored people and other minority groups will be used in the future, the New York City Board of Education has informed textbook publishers.

School Superintendent John Theobald said it was time to change the "largely white Anglo-Saxon view of our society in our textbooks" as expressed in most books.

Most present - day books, he said, tended to ignore contributions by such groups as colored, Indians, Jews and citizens of Latin and Asian origin in the "historical development of the American people."

THE AMERICAN Jewish Congress hailed as "long overdue" the announcement by the Board. Will Maslow, A. J. Congress executive director laid particular emphasis on the failure of most social studies texts to cover the bitter period adequately. "Textbook treatment of Jewish life should make certain to include the Hitler era and the terrible lesson this ultimate expression of anti-Semitism holds for all humanity," he declared.

DETROIT absenteeism was about 200 per cent higher than usual Wednesday in a one-day pupil boycott of classes at crowded Northern High School.

The boycott came after some 20 parents picketed the school at Grand River and West Grand Boulevard at 7:30 a.m., urging youngsters not to attend classes.

Arthur E. Diekoff, principal, said nearly 1,200 pupils were absent, or about 35 per cent of the school's enrollment of 3,339 pupils. About 12 per cent of the pupils (or around 400) are absent on a normal day, he said.

Pickets, all members of the Northwest Parents Committee for Better Schools, bore signs charging that educational standards at the school have been lowered due to congestion of students. The committee has protested to the Board of Education several times about overcrowding.

Nation's lawyers blamed for violence on Ole Miss campus

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — The nation's lawyers, both in the North and the South, adopted an attitude of "deafening silence" in the wake of the Supreme Court's desegregation decision, a Justice Department aide said Wednesday.

Deputy Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach told a meeting of the District Bar Association's junior chapter that the attitude of the American legal profession had actually contributed to the violence that engulfed the University of Mississippi campus.

The No. 2 man in the Justice Department said that, instead of helping to win public acceptance of the court decision on school desegregation, many lawyers spent their time "seeking a way out of a decision that they didn't like."

KATZENBACH, who personally directed federal operations on the Ole Miss campus, said the lawyers, "as officers of the court, had a duty to help win acceptance in their communities."

He conceded that some lawyers had been helpful, but asserted that actions such as those taken by John Satterfield, a Mississippi attorney, had set a sad precedent for the profession.

A FORMER president of the American Bar Association and legal counsel for Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett, Satterfield insisted that decisions handed down by the U.S. Supreme Court were destroying the federal system of government.

Until lawyers stop looking at controversial issues only in terms of the immediate effect on their careers, "this unhappy situation will continue to go on in Mississippi, in Alabama and elsewhere," Katzenbach concluded.
