importance of his defeat, it is also necessary to know what special qualities made him the type of judge that should not have been defeated.

BEFORE he became a Municipal Court judge, or even a magistrate under the old system, Mr. Watts had established himself as a competent attorney.

He earned the respect of the colored community and the white community — not in the traditional way of hat in hand and "yessuh" in mouth, but with a proud and uncompriising stance that invariably piqued him against all the inequalities that man would impose on man.

Far from being afraid to speak out, Mr. Watts seemed to actually seek out opportunities to strike down those things he considered wrong in our society.

There was a dark night in a driving rain when he walked in a picket line outside a restaurant at Monroe St. and Edmondson Ave., because colored persons were restricted to "carry-out" service.

There were many other nights, and many other picket lines.

There were civil rights cases in which he never asked a fee. There was the advice he gave so freely, to those who fought what he considered the good fight.

Such was the nature of the man, that even those who opposed him the hardest, were forced to respect him.

This was the type of man who sat on the Municipal Bench and proved that his appointment had been a good one.

WHY THEN was he defeated?

1. Complacency.
2. Lack of organized support for his candidacy.
3. "Single shooting" on the part of the other judges.
4. Location of his name on the voting machine.
5. Entry of other candidates into the race.

Let us examine these causes in detail.

COMPLACENCY

Perhaps a better name for this would be apathy.

Judge Watts was such a good judge, that it was almost impossible to even believe that he might be defeated.

Somewhere along the line, the community forget the words of Leo Durocher — "nice guys finish last"—so no one got really excited about the Municipal Court and Judge Watts.

Outside of the Fourth District senatorial race, the past campaign did not hold much interest for the voters, and this lack of interest seeped down to the judgeship level.

There were no burning issues to be discussed, no battle cry that could be sounded to rally the troops to the ramparts, no shouts of "on to the New Frontiers".

LACK OF ORGANIZED SUPPORT

Coupled with the complacency, was the lack of organized support for Judge Watts.

As a sitting judge, Watts could not do any active campaigning on his own, because of the rules that say a judge shall not engage in partisan politics.

When he did appear at a meeting, the best plea he could make was to ask the voters to support all of the sitting judges, and to mention in passing, that he was one of these judges.

A campaign such as this, is by its very nature, not designed to arouse the fervor of partisanship in voters, and without partisanship, it is difficult to move people to action.

There was no group that was pushing Judge Watts.

Everyone wished him well, but there was nobody to ring doorbells, no one to sway the voters, no one to see that his name remained constantly before the public.

There was a group, operating from downtown, that backed the candidacy of all the sitting judges — and here is the key to why their efforts didn't work in the case of Judge Watts —they backed ALL the candidates with no special emphasis on Judge Watts.

A number of the other judges had people out working for them no matter if the rules did say they were not suppose to actively campaign.

Judge Watts, sticking to the rules, had no such help.

AN EXAMPLE of this "undercover" type of campaigning is to be found in paigning, is to be found in a letter sent out by a white real estate man, doing almost 100 per cent of his business in colored neighborhoods.

In the letters, he asked the recipients, all white, to vote for only three judges, whom he quite obligingly named.

The real estate man denied that racism had anything to do with his selections, but even if this is believed, the letter could not have done the candidacy of the sole colored judge on the bench any good.

JOSEPH BROCCOLINO who sought to oust one of the eight sitting judges, was in a particularly advantageous position.

Not only could he actively campaign, but he had the support of several political machines, and he could depend on the Italian bloc vote.

He was also blessed by being able to appear on the radio programs of a commentator, who had given him a great deal of publicity when he, Broccolino, was a magistrate at the Old Northeastern Police Court.

In the end, it was Broccolino who defeated Judge Watts.

Even on Election Day, Judge Watts was harmed by the fact that the official Democratic ballot did not carry the namts of the sitting judges.

In some cases, cards advocating his election were not distributed until late in the afternoon, when a number of votes had already been cast.

SINGLE SHOOTING

"Single shooting" is an old technique in the political arena. In the case of the Municipal Judges here is how it worked.

There were ten men seeking the eight seats on the bench. Each voter was entitled to vote for eight men.

Instead of voting for all eight a voter was instructed to vote for only one candidate.

This had the effect of increasing that candidate's strength without giving his opponents a vote.

There was a general agreement among the judges that they would not "single-shoot" on their own behalf, but would ask voters to support the entire ticket.

Judge Watts lived up to his end of the agreement, but a number of the other judges

Instead of asking for support of all the judges, they asked for support only for themselves.

In an effort to have all the judges elected, Watts involved them into his community — but several of them, overcome by selfish interests, did not bother to invite him into their communities.

It was a case of their giving lip service to a principle, and then selling their comrade down the river.

PLACEMENT OF NAME

A name, a name, what's in a name?

Sometimes it doesn't pay to have a last name that begins with one of the last letters in the alphabet.

Because of his last name, Mr. Watts was the last judge listed on the ballot.

Before his name, were eight other Democrats and one Republican.

A voter was asked to cast his ballot for eight of the judges, and many people, following human nature, pulling down the first eight levers.

When they reached Judge Watts' name, they could not pull down this lever.

ONLY THE angels above will ever know just how many people walked into the booth, pulled the curtain shut, and then pushed down the first eight levers, before they realized they had not voted for Judge Watts.

After leaving the polling place, a number of voters complained to the Board of Election Supervisors and the AFRO, that the lever over Judge Watts' name was jammed.

When it was explained that the lever was not jammed, but that they had used up their eight selections before they reached Judge Watts, they groaned — but it was too late.

OTHER CANDIDATES

The entry of Mr. Brocollino and W. A. C. Hughes, the latter a Republican, into the race, also worked an adverse effect on Mr. Watts.

Mr. Broccolino cut into the Democratic ticket that Mr. Watts might have expected to receive.

It is also believed that some voters were unaware that they could have voted for Mr. Hughes and Mr. Watts as well.

Taken together, all these things help explain why a man who couldn't lose, did lose.

"IFs" form an important part of politics, and this case is no different.

If colored voters had voted as a bloc and voted only for Judge Watts, he would have won.

If he could have been able to conduct an active campaign he would have won.

If a concentrated campaign in his behalf had ben mounted he would have won.

But the road to disaster is paved with "ifs" and none of these "ifs" happened.

AND WHAT of the future for Judge Watts?

With his characteristic outlook on life, he has accepted this defeat, graciously.

What has been done, has been done, and cannot be undone.

However, it certainly must hurt a bit for a man to realize how much service he has given his community, how much dignity and responsibility he has brought to his profession, and how a combination of circumstances beyond his control have retired him to the sidelines.

It hurts, but Judge Watts' concern is not for himself, but for his people who have lost their sole representative on the Municipal Court.

The people who know him best, believe that this is not the end of the career of Mr. Watts in public life, only a temporary defeat.

It would be a tragedy, if it was other than this.

Tawes gets 65.6% of vote in Fourth

Mrs. Verda Welcome, in winning a Fourth District seat in the State Senate, polled 12,465 votes.

Governor Tawes ... 13,128
U. S. Senator Brewster ... 12,886
Comptroller Goldstein 12,770
Atty. Gen Finan ... 10,939
Cong.-at-large Sickles 10,809

As a vote getter, Mrs. Welcome's total topped all other district candidates. She received 60 per cent of votes cast. Dr. John Woodland (R) 40 per cent.

NUTSHELL

In the same manner, young 22-year-old Clarence Mitchell 3rd, with 11,934 votes led all other candidates elected to the House of Delegates.

Mrs. Irma Dixon took second place with 11,890.

51%

The vote was extremely light. Only 51 per cent of all the voters in the city cast their ballots.

In 165 AFRO precincts, where colored voters are in the majority, 45.7 per cent of those registered voted.

Actually, 48,421 persons cast their ballots in these predominantly colored precincts.

TAWES 65.6%

Governor Tawes polled 65.6 per cent of the colored vote and his Republican opponent, Frank Small, 34.4 per cent.

Colored Precincts Ahead

In the entire city, Governor Tawes polled 63.3 per cent of the vote. Actually the governor polled three tenths of one per cent higher vote in the colored precincts than in the city as a whole.

Daniel Brewester, U. S. Senator, Attorney General Thomas B. Finan, Comptroller Louis Goldstein, and Congressman-at-large Carlton Sickles, were not far behind the governor in total votes cast in the AFRO's 165 colored precincts.

However, Mr. Brewster polled 76 per cent of the votes cast for senator in these precincts. Mr. Goldstein 77.6%; Mr. Finan 74.6%, and Mr. Sickles 70%.

District Dems to back NCTA report

The Democratic Central Committee went on record Monday, November 5, unanimously supporting the National Capital Transportation Agency report.

Proposed by Mrs. Polly Shackleton, Democratic National Committeewoman, the resolution emphasized concern for relocation problems and called on the District Commissioners to include the NCTA recommendations in the 1964 Fiscal Budget.

The NCTA was commended for "proposing better public transportation facilities for all of our citizens including those — elderly people, students, low income groups and others — for whom public transportation is an absolute necessity."

In Memoriam 3

FOGLE — In loving memory of my dear husband, SAMUEL FOGLE, who passed away November 13, 1956:

Sweet is the soft, dim light I pass to see the land

And thinks of him whom the sun's last ray

Goes down in the far-off West.

Sweet is the hour of prayer, dear husband!

Then I did on the day of your going,

For absence can never close the door on my heart

And the lamp of my love is still glowing.

My heart was the truest in all the circle of life

Your love the best to recall

But the cup of life on earth can take

Your place

For you are the dearest of all.

YOUR LOVING WIFE, BEULAH.

JOHNSON — In loving memory of our son, LAURA L., who departed this life eight years ago, November 13, 1954:

What is home without a mother? All things this world may offer

But when we lost our darling mother,

We lost our dearest friend.
