their own groups.

"A pet theory of mine is that Baltimore lost many capable colored people during the years this state did not admit colored people to the University of Maryland but provided out-of-state scholarships for them. I feel it resulted in a great many gifted people leaving, getting their education in the North and never coming back. That's just my theory.

"When colored leaders are mentioned, everyone seems to name the same five people over and over again.

Mrs. Ramsay felt there were many leaders among Baltimore's colored professional. "I went to the testimonial dinner for Mr. Edward Wilson, the Morgan State College registrar and I remarked. 'My what a distinguished looking group this is.'

"While I knew many people present there were many more on hand who certainly must have had potential leadership but I did not know them.

"There is not much inter - mingling among groups here as in other American cities. This is true of the Gentile and Jewish communities as well as the colored."

On inadequate leadership, Mrs. Ramsay also pointed a finger at what she termed "The Bourbon Whites who have been in the world the colored man is ostracized. How can you have leadership when the colored man and is still being psychologically castrated?

"There are many things we have to do. We have to wash our own windows and repair our own house and take advantage of every opportunity. I think the Muslims have some good things but I am not a radical. I have no college degrees. I feared about life right out here in the street.

Young Get Things Done

MISS ALVIDENE RICHARDSON, 19, 280 block Winwood Ct., Cherry Hill, a statistical clerk at Spring Grove, reflected the new spirit of Baltimore's youthful citizens.

She said:

"I know of two colored leaders in Baltimore. One is doing something, the other is not doing anything. There is Mrs. Verna Welcome in politics, but I do not think she is doing anything really, nor can she because she is aligned with Governor Tawes, an Eastern Shore politician.

"I would say the AFRO provides some leadership and direction, but it isn't militant enough. For one thing your paper does not really get into the issues that affect great numbers of people. It's fine to boost Judge (Robert) Watts or someone, but right here in Cherry Hill, jobs for a great many people are just as important as a job for one man, more important really.

"I'm young but it seems to me that people who claim to be leaders of colored people in this city are interested only in their personal gain.

"I would say the young people in direct - action groups like CORE and CIG are the real leaders, they get things done while older people sit around and talk or else are to satisfied to do anything. I know the Rev. Martin Luther King is a leader because he has done something for a group of people who were willing to do something for themselves.

"IN BALTIMORE, too many people, colored or white, don't care about issues like discrimination or civic improvement so nothing much gets done.

"I would say Baltimore needs more leaders like Walter Carter of CORE. He gives his time and money and is not afraid to buck other colored people who move too slowly or are to selfish as well as putting his life on the line in sit - ins and picketing.

"And I don't belong to his group, but I have read about him in the AFRO and other papers and can see that he has at least done something besides run his mouth.

Our Men Ostracized, But Women Free

LEWIS E. SKINNER, 42, of the 1300 block N. Fulton Ave., is a former postal worker, presently unemployed.

"We have some potentially good leaders. I think Harry Cole did a good job during his tenure as state senator, but like anything else he needed time, a second term.

"Colored people have little heritage to pass on to the next generation. Maybe that's changing now. They say Tom Smith was the most powerful colored politician this town has ever known, but what did Tom Smith leave us? When he died, his machine and his power died with him. That's what I mean. Each generation we must begin all over again.

"But this leadership business goes back to the basic thing. The colored woman and the white man have all the freedom in the world the colored man is ostracized. How can you have leadership when the colored man and is still being psychologically castrated?

"There are many things we have to do. We have to wash our own windows and repair our own house and take advantage of every opportunity. I think the Muslims have some good things but I am not a radical. I have no college degrees. I feared about life right out here in the street.

WHAT THE PUBLIC SAID

THESE ARE observations by leading community figures, but what does John Q. Public think about all this.

The AFRO found Teddy Lee Epps, 26, of the 1600 block John St., in a pool - room.

"Colored leaders?" said Mr. Epps. "Who've we got? The trouble with Baltimore leaders is that once they get in power the only thing they lead after that is themselves. I am glad you asked me this. I've been waiting for an opportunity to sound off about this."

He took time to run a 3 ball into a side - pocket, then he rested his cue stick and said, "I would say the NAACP is trying to be fair. I have had no dealings with Mrs. Lillie Jackson, its president, but I think her grandson Clarence Mitchell (recently elected to the House of Delegates) might do something constructive.

"Now I am he radical but I really dig Muhammad's radio broadcast. What he says makes sense to me but my mother told to believe in only one thing, Christianity. Make that two things, the Democratic party.

"I think colored people and school-teachers should to more for those less fortunate of their brethren. But they don't, they're too busy fattening their own pockesk."

Mr. Epps is enrolled in the Manpower Training Program sponsored by the Federal government. He was asked if any local group or leader had apprised him of this program.

"The Urban League, what's that?" asked Mr. Epps. "I never heard of them. I got into the Manpower program because a woman at the Housing Authority told me about it, plus I read in the papers that Kennedy has pushed this program through Congress."

Should Protest Brutality:

MILTON WIGGINS, 23, of the 600 block Lafayette Ave., unemployed, said:

"I don't think our leaders are concerned about this police brutality issue. They don't protest enough on the way colored people are continually manhandled by the police. It's happened to me without cause and when I protested to the officer, he cursed me.

"I know quite a few school teachers who seem to be active in the community but as for really strong leaders, I know of none."

THESE ARE the views of various Baltimoreans on the issue of leadership in this city.

Who is right or wrong does not seem important. As on observer put it, "At last Baltimoreans, black and white, rich and poor, are beginning to have an agonizing reappraisal of such problems. This is healthy. When people begin saying openly what has been whispered about behind closed doors, things can only get better."

English supervisor granted divorce

Mrs. Josie Stevens Smith, supervisor of English in city schools, won a divorce from J. Walter Smith this week.

Mrs. Smith testified that Mr. Smith deserted her on May 24, 1959. They were married in St. James Episcopal Church on Dec. 2, 1942.

Mrs. Smith, who gave her present address as 2326 Madison Avenue, said that the desertion occurred at their Catonsville, Md. home, 6100 Rich Avenue.

Later, the wife said, Mr. Smith moved his belongings to his place of business, an upholstery shop, at 2340 Pennsylvania Avenue.

Along with the divorce, Mrs. Smith received some household items, but relinquished rights to support and alimony.

She also agreed to pay the court costs and her counsel's fee in relation to the divorce proceedings.

Mr. Smith agreed to continue to pay the required $98.50 on the mortgage, with an option of buying the property on the basis of $15,000 within 18 months.

If he exercises the option, he will pay a half of the purchase price, less the full amount then owing on the mortgage to Mrs. Smith.
