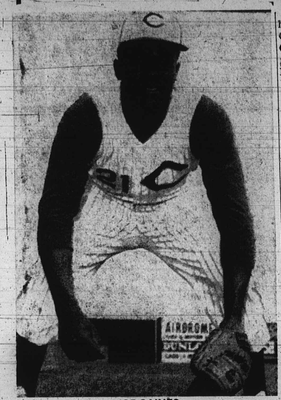
Orioles pin hopes on tan speedster, ex-Red Gaines



JOE GAINES may answer Bird prayer

The news that the Orioles had acquired the contract of Cincinnati outfielder Joe Gaines attracted very little notice when the story broke late Saturday night, December 15, just an hour or so before the inter-league trade deadline.

The deal was consummated too late at night for the newspapers to do much with it, and besides the Birds had just completed a big six-player trade with the Giants involving name players earlier the same day. Furthermore, in an American League oriented city like Baltimore, not many people had ever heard of Joe Gaines.

But the facts are these. He is 26, bats righthanded, plays the outfield and runs like a deer. The Orioles thought enough of him to give the Reds in exchange contracts of two promising players on the Rochester roster: reliever Dick Hawkins and infielder Willard Oplinger.

* * *

THE BIRDS for a long time have been looking for a power hitting outfielder who bats from the right side to go with Jack Brandt. (For the last three years opponents have been using as many lefthand pitchers as possible against Baltimore to concentrate on the lefthand hitting Jim Gentile, their principal power threat.)

Gaines won't supply the long ball often enough to completely satisfy all these requirements, but the Birds are probably more lacking in speed than they are in power.

The importance of fleet footedness in a club's attack are amply illustrated by the Dodgers' successful in recent seasons with the Reds last years. The 1959 American League White Sox were another prime example.

* * *

GAINES WAS left off the whole season with the Reds last year, but appeared in only 54 games, and was a pinch-hitter in 46 of these (he hit .282 as pinch-hitter and .231 overall)...

It was no disgrace that he couldn't break into a lineup which already included Vada Pinson, Frank Robinson, Wally Post and Jerry Lynch.

In winter play, however, where he has no such rugged competition on his own team, Joe has played regular. At last reports, he was belting the ball at a .331 clip for San Juan in the Puerto Rican League.

* * *

MORE TO the point as far as Orioles boss Lee MacPhail was concerned was Gaines' record at Indianapolis (Class AAA) in 1961. There he hit .315, walloped 10 homers, drove in 65 runs and swiped 29 bases.

It is that last figure that is particularly intriguing to the Orioles. The club record for stolen bases in a full year is only 14 (Al Pilarcik in 1957).

Last year Brandt led the club with nine.

* * *

JOE HAS been in the Cincinnati system since signing his first professional contract in 1956 after graduating from Technical High School in Oakland, California, still his off-season home.

The Oakland public school system, incidentally, has produced a number of colored major league ballplayers. Pinson, Frank Robinson, Willy Tabsy and Charlie Beamon as well as basketball's Bill Russell — all attended McClymonds High in Oakland.

* * *

IN 1957, Joe's first full season in organized ball, he played at Visalia in the California League, hit .359 and stole 34 bases. Reports from Visalia that summer raved about the "two fastest outfielders in baseball." Pinson was one, the other was Gaines.

He was promoted from Class C to A the next season, but a knee injury sustained during the winter slowed what might have been a meteoric rise to the big time. He played in only 48 games in 1958, and ultimately came to Baltimore for surgery at Johns Hopkins Hospital.

* * *

THOUGH THE operation was successful and the knee no longer bothered him, 1959 was just a fair year for Joe. The following winter he went into the service for six months. After separation he reported to the Reds' training camp late in the spring of 1960. In an effort to make up for lost time, and to catch up with others who had been in camp for almost a month, he injured his arm.

Assigned to the Pacific Coast League at the start he was unable to play regularly because of the bad arm. Subsequently, he was called up to the Reds, but saw limited action as a pinch-hitter or runner.

* * *

FINALLY the Reds sent him back to the Sally League where he hit .327. This performance led him directly to of his competitors right out of Indianapolis where he had his big full year in 1961.

Unfortunately, for Joe there wasn't much opportunity at Cincinnati last year. The Oriole training camp at Miami next spring, however, could very well be a "promised land" for the big fellow from Oakland.

He might just "run" some of his competitors right out.

Colts' and Skins' kids in Crusade

Top college draft choices of the Baltimore Colts and Washington Redskins are outstanding among colored players who will perform in Baltimore's first annual Crusade Bowl football game set for Memorial Stadium a week from Sunday (Jan. 6).

Willie Richardson, fabulous six foot, two inch, 196-pound pass receiving end from Jackson, Miss., State, and a draft selection recently signed by the Colts, will perform with the Western against the Eastern College All-Stars in this game featuring National Football League draft selections that will benefit the American Cancer Society, Maryland Division.

LONNIE SANDERS, also a brilliant pass receiving end claimed by the Washington Redskins in the draft, will line up with the East.

Lonnie was the Redskins' no. 2 college draft pick and Richardson No. 7 with the Colts.

BOTH RICHARDSON and Sanders were standouts in the annual Shrine-sponsored North-South College All-Star football game at Miami last Saturday as the South squeaked by the winner, 15–14.

Richardson rose to unprecedented heights in this one, not only by breaking down color barriers while performing with the South, but by scoring both of his team's touchdowns, the last in the final 37 seconds of play that enabled the South to core its determining two points on a pass as time was running out.

SANDERS and Dave Francis, the latter a fullback from Ohio State and also a draft choice of the Redskins who will play with the East, registered the North's TD's.

Tan stars who will be used in the Crusade Bowl and who are expected to inject considerable punch into the West's lineup, are: Harlow Fullwood, 6-4, 248 pounds, Virginia Union, and Don Lisbon, 6-1, 180-pound halfback from Bowling Green.
