CAMBRIDGE MUST FREE YOUNG COUPLE

Baltimore Notebook

By MAX JOHNSON

There are two very important phases of the elections next year, which should be attracting the attention of political and civic-minded organizations—at this early date even.

They are:

1. Three of the city's Supreme Bench judges, appointed by Gov. Tawes, must run for election to retain their seats.

2. Four Municipal Court judges, whose appointive terms will expire at the close of next year, will also be required to run for election.

The Supreme Bench jurists are Judges J. Harold Grady, Charles D. Harris and Wilson K. Barnes.

Those on the Municipal Court are Judges William M. Hudnet, John A. McGuire, Basil A. Thomas and I. Sewell Lamdin.

HERE, THEN, are two situations which should kick the pending May primary to a thought-provoking spot now—especially for the colored citizen.

For here's where the thing hurts most—as matters now stand.

This city has no colored Supreme Bench judges, no colored Criminal, City, Circuit nor Superior Court bailiffs or clerks.

There are no colored judges on the Municipal Court.

This should be viewed as appalling—here in Baltimore where over a third of the registered voters are colored.

AS A matter of fact—the Supreme Bench judges refused a few weeks ago to name a colored attorney to a vacant masters in chancery post with the Circuit Court.

The bypassed applicant in this instance is the highly capable Robert B. Watts—who not only has notable ability as an attorney but judicial experience as well, having been a former Municipal Court judge.

Masters in chancery take testimony in divorce proceedings—and over 50 percent of such cases through their offices here involve colored couples.

Yet—the very capable Mr. Watts was bypassed.

The May primary in the area of the aforementioned judgeships, then, assumes a high degree of importance.

* * *

IT SHOULD be evident by now that if colored citizens are to get representation on the Supreme Bench or the Municipal Court in the near future — such judgeships must come by the way of the ballot.

The three Supreme Bench instances and the four up for grabs on the Municipal Court present an opportune situation.

The possibilities are high—though such candidates will be running on a city-wide ticket.

His friends are of the opinion Mr. Watts would, if a marked degree of organizational support is foreseen, make a bid for a Supreme Bench judgeship.

He would be ideal. The city's Bar Association has previously endorsed him.

Sitting judges run on both the Democratic and Republican primary tickets.

* * *

MR. WATTS, a Democrat, would need-the concentrated effort of his party members to get through the primary.

Should this prove successful—members of both parties could rally behind him in the subsequent November general election.

Taking first things first—the big hurdle is the May primary.

Latest Supervisors of Elections registration figures show 75,100 colored and 227,600 white Democrats on the books.

In the 1960 primary—two appointed Supreme Bench judges won in the Democratic primary by votes ranging roughly between 68,700 to 70,100.

* * *

GETTING MR. WATTS past the primary would require quite some effort—but it can be done.

It should be done.

And while this is being done—similar effort should be placed on backing a strong colored candidate for a Municipal Court judgeship nomination.

More than one such Democratic candidate would divide efforts—and defeat the ultimate purpose.

The same must be the case—should the candidate be Republican.

There are 32,300 colored and 38,140 white Republicans registered.

* * *

THE POINT here is—something should be done about colored representation on both the Supreme Bench and the Municipal Court.

And the pending May primary affords an excellent opportunity to get well along the way toward both.

Somebody should be mad enough by now, what with the continued bypassing of competent colored attorneys for judgeship appointments—to exercise the power of the vote.

All that's needed in this instance is concentrated effort.

Register to vote campaigns have proven this effort can be applied for desired results.

Comes time now for a companion vote campaign.

Schools to close for convention

CARE sends assistance to Haiti

In response to a direct appeal from the Haitian government, CARE (Cooperative American Relief Everywhere) has begun an emergency relief program to aid thousands of homeless victims of Hurricane Flora.

An initial release of $5,000 for blankets and other immediately needed material has been authorized. At the same time, CARE will begin the first distribution of 20,000 food packages consisting of milk powder, flour, cheese, vegetable oil, beans and bulgar wheat.

Interested donors are requested to mark their remittances "for Haitian relief," CARE, Baltimore, 21201.

Register to vote, change address now

The registration books are now open for citizens to become eligible voters for the primary election early next year.

Citizens may register at the Supervisors of Elections office, ground floor, People's Court Bldg., Fayette and Gay Sts., 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. on Thursday.

Who must register—Those who will become 21 years of age prior to next year's election; newcomers to the city who have lived here at least a year.

Change of address — Citizens who have been registered as eligible voters, but have changed their address in recent months without notifying the Supervisors of Elections, should do so now.

IT MAY BE necessary to register again. Several thousand citizens who have changed addresses in the past two-year period without notification to the Supervisors of Elections, have been stricken from the books as eligible voters.

Court upholds NAACP appeal

One of the two teenage Freedom Fighters jailed for four months for taking part in civil rights demonstrations in Cambridge, has been released on probation to his grandmother.

Dwight Cromwell was released Thursday. The other teenager, Reva Dineg White, is still being held.

NAACP attorneys won a decision in the Maryland Court of Appeals on Wednesday that paved the way for the action.

The state's highest court ordered a review of their cases, reversing the original decision of Dorchester County circuit judge, D. McMaster Duer who ruled the minors juvenile delinquents.

Committment of Dinez and Dwight set off a deep emotional reaction among colored residents of Cambridge.

THE COURT of Appeals decision said in part:

"While we hold that the disorderly conduct shown was sufficient to support the finding of delinquency the conduct of these appellants (Dinez and Dwight) standing alone, was not so fundamentally wrong as to require permanent treatment, as distinguished from temporary custodial care.

"Incarceration of these children beyond the immediate need for their protection could hardly be supported."

The Court was critical of lower court finding that the teen - agers were "incorrigible" or "beyond the control of their parents" as had been charged.

Said the Court: "It should be noted that the evidence on these points was admitted prior to any adjudication of delinquency... Moreover the State put in evidence, over objection, summaries of reports by school principals and teachers, that had been gathered by the school superintendent, although the persons making the reports were not present for cross-examination."

THE APPEALS judges noted that these school reports on the youngsters were contradictory. "... the statements as to Dinez speak of an unacceptable behavior pattern, at another of cooperation in the current year. In the case of Dwight, the statements speak at one point of emotional disturbance, at another of marked improvement."

In admitting this material and preventing cross-examination of school personnel, the Court ruled, Judge Duer had erred.

"Apart from being hearsay the report was irrelevant and misleading," said the Appeals judges.

In ordering a review of the cases, the Court asked that the lower court re-hear the cases "in the light of the situation now found to exist," referring to the present comparatively racial calm in Cambridge and the continuance of state militia in Cambridge to keep the peace.

Mrs. Juanita J. Mitchell and Tucker Dearing, NAACP attorneys said they were in touch with NAACP chief counsel Jack Greenberg and would confer on the best legal approach for a re-trial hearing.

Miss White has already been permitted one visit home from the Maryland Training School for Girls, and is expected to be released shortly.

New exhibit at Morgan

The Murphy Galleries are open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily, and from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday. The galleries are closed on Sundays.

Cockrell says GOP can't run Ike for Veep

The possibility of former Dwight D. Eisenhower, becoming a candidate for the Republican nomination for vice president and possibly being elected is ruled out by the U.S. Constitution.

Paul J. Cockrell, attorney, offered this opinion Wednesday, on the heels of an apparent move in some quarters to boost Eisenhower for such a post.

Mr. Cockrull stated:

"The recently enacted and ratified 22nd Amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides that:

"No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of the President more than once.'

* * *

"THE ABOVE Constitutional provision standing alone is clear on matters regarding the Presidency, however, it does not cover matters regarding the Vice - Presidency.

"When one looks at the 12th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States one finds the answer regarding the Vice Presidency in the following language:

"'. . . no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice President of the United States.'

Since Mr. Eisenhower has already been elected to the office of President twice, it would seem that the 22nd amendment constitutionally bars him from further election to that office.

"And it would seem also that the 12th Amendment constitutionary bars him from the office of Vice President.'

Yes, Mr. Cockrell is a Democrat.

AN AFRO EXCLUSIVE

LAST DAY OF A FIGHTER

Accused slept, then left court

By WILBUR PINDER

A Southwest Baltimore mother says she reported to police Sunday, as Law Enforcement week ended, that a white man had attempted to criminally assault her seven - year - old daughter.

The woman said she gave police the suspect's color, the make and license number of his car, and the company by which she believed he was employed.

After questioning the girl and her parents, police reported they attempted to obtain a warrant, but Judge Joseph Broccolino Jr. refused to issue the warrant on the grounds that the complainant was a seven-year-old child and because of the lack of a more complete identification.

However, Judge Broccolino did issue a summons for the owner of the vehicle to appear in the Southwestern Municipal Court on Tuesday for a show cause hearing.

* * *

ACCORDING TO Judge Broccolino the purpose of the hearing would be two - fold. First, to see if the child could identify the suspect and second, to find if the suspect and owner of the vehicle were the same.

At the hearing, Judge Broccolino asked the girl to point out the man she claimed attempt to assault her. She did, without hesitation.

She pointed to an elderly man seated near the rear of the courtroom.

"That's the one," she said. "The man that is sleeping."

The man owns the vehicle. He is 63 - year - old man, employed by a detective agency to guard a construction site near the home of the child.

Judge Broccolino called the man from his seat. When he was before the bench, the magistrate explained to him the nature of the hearing and that the charge was a serious one.

* * *

THE MAN began to speak in a quiet voice. "I don't mean anything. She had fallen. I always give her money . . ."

"Just a minute," the judge interrupted. "I advise you to say no more until you have obtained a lawyer. I think you need one."

The magistrate then advised the complainant's family they need not hire a lawyer.

"If you did get a lawyer,"

FOR SCHOOL BOARD:

A peaceful session

Aside from former City Solicitor Francis B. Burch's latest "individual" opinion on classroom prayer and Bible reading, the Thursday meeting of the Baltimore Board of School Commissioners was as peaceful that at least one commissioner dozed momentarily.

In a meeting that was for the first time in months not marred by racial or other controversy, the commissioners took care of routine school business in little over an hour's time.

The board noted the retirement of 20 veteran teachers and approved 27 staff appointments and leave requests and 10 resignations.

Mr. Burch, former chief lawyer for Baltimore, was granted a public hearing before the board to present his latest observations on the school prayer issue. He stressed that he was appearing as an "individual."

The U. S. Supreme Court during its last term ruled public school prayer unconstitutional. Mr. Burch was not in sympathy with this ruling. He has since that time, as a private citizen, been active in keeping some form of worship ritual in public school.

(An Editorial)

There are neither enough policemen, nor do we have the kind of police department that appears to be able to keep order after high school football games, and indeed on other occasions in our community.

This is the year of revolution and these are angry people. Part of their anger comes from unemployment, but a great deal of it comes from a police department which is nearly all-white administered and in which substantial promotions are denied to colored people.

In our judgment, a colored police captain in the Northwestern District, given a sufficient number of patrolmen, would know what to do.

Teachers convene

By WALTER R. DEAN

The city's 184,000 pupils have a long holiday which began Thursday at noon.

Their 7,300 teachers and administrators and thousands from over the state, are attending the 96th annual convention of the Maryland State Teachers Association through Saturday, at the Civic Center.

The educators came from all over the state.

Robert Y. Dubel, associate executive secretary of MSTA, reported that 12,000 persons had enrolled for the convention by Thursday afternoon. He predicted that some 18,000 persons would attend.

Gov. Terry Sanford of North Carolina, delivered the address at the first general session, Thursday.

He told the audience that "... education is the ultimate weapon" in the defense of freedom.

THE GOVERNOR said that education is the best defense against the "subversion of our democratic ideals."

Speaking about the "most pressing domestic conflict in America," civil rights, Gov.

Teen-agers run wild after game

Violence and terror gripped the neighborhood surrounding Douglass High School Thursday when hundreds of teenage hoodlums, male and female, raged out of control after a Douglass-Dunbar football game.

In the violence after the game:

A teen-age East Baltimore boy was stabbed he fought a mob of 40-50 other youths.

A 61-year-old man of the 2200 block Clifton Ave. was beaten as he tried to prevent the mob from invading his home.

To continue their attack on the wounded youth, the teens threw chairs, tables and flower boxes on porches in the 2200 block Clifton. They smashed windows in an attempt to get at the knifing victim.

Eyewitnesses report that the home owner, Norman Cooper, in fighting off the gang, prevented a possible homicide.

The youth he protected had already been slashed on his neck and arm.

* * *

THERE WERE many other separate instances of violence along streets of the Clifton Ave., Bentalou-Payson Sts. and North Ave. area below the high school.

At AFRO presstime, residents had reported two known beatings of students at the North and Bentalou intersection.

Further, they reported that small children in the area were terrorized, passersby were cursed and threatened, teen-agers both boys and girls were visibly drunk in the streets.

Cars carrying teen-agers careened through the streets at high speeds as they played.

Three youngsters narrowly missed injury on Clifton Ave. as it came close to being out of control in a path that would

Fatal blaze probed, Sprow rites held

While the family of Otis Sprow attended private double funeral services Wednesday, for father and daughter, police fire investigators still sought to find answers for the mystery that surrounds the Whittier Ave. tragedy.

The funeral services were held in a private chapel of the Law Funeral Home. The Rev. Robert T. Newbold officiated. Burial was in the Baltimore National Cemetery.

The Sunday morning fire at the home of Mr. Sprow, 44, 2007 Whittier Ave., resulted in his death and that of his six - year - old daughter, Monica.

* * *

ARSON SQUAD investigators are still searching for clues as to how the fire started and the identity of three men who were directed from the burning building by a police officer.

Police said that Mr. Sprow, an employee of the Department of Recreation, received first, second and third degree burns of at least 100 per cent of his body.

They said his daughter, who slept in another room, had died from smoke asphixiation. Firemen, at the scene, applied artificial respiration on the girl to no avail.

The fire was first noticed, according to police, by radio car Patrolman Donald Ryan and James Fink, as they patroled a nearby shopping center.

After seeing the flames coming from the Whittier Ave. home the two officers reported they rushed to the house and saw fire shooting from a second floor window.

In the house, the officers said the fire was so bad that they were unable to reach the front bedroom of the two-story home, where Mr. Sprow was sleeping.

In an attempt to reach the room, however, Patrolman Ryan received flash burns of the face.

* * *

THE PATROLMAN stated that upon entering the house, they found two men asleep in chairs and another on the living room sofa. The men, police said, were awakened

Sought fortune but found death in pair of gloves

'If I win tonight, I'm going to the bigtime'

By GEORGE W. COLLINS

Monday night was supposed to have been a big night for Ernie (Rainbow) Knox.

That's when the unemployed laborer, part-time hackie, part-time private detective and boxer with a dream, was supposed to have gone a long way forward, with fame and fortune at the end of the fistic rainbow.

But as dreams often do, Monday night turned into a nightmare and Ernie's search was ended — he's dead.

Left in his wake are a quartet of heartbroken young women, grieving relatives and old friends, and new tumult and shouting to "ban professional boxing."

Knox, 27-year-old prize fighter who nursed hopes of hitting the big time in the squared circle, died at 6 a.m. Wednesday in Provident Hospital, 31 hours after he was knocked loose from his sensational victory over Bethea, his manager, Mack Lewis, said would have meant a gateway to big fights and bigger pay days for a boxer who had never earned more than $300 for a night's work in the ring.

* * *

HE LAPSED into a coma three hours after he was admitted to Provident for "precautionary measures" and never regained consciousness.

The death brought to a shocking and tragic end the restless ambitions of a young man who has been described as "a good hustler," "pretty good fighter," "nice guy" and "quite a lover."

Stories differ as to what Monday night meant to Ernie. Some say it was the night he would be cast in the spotlight of a main event over six years and 19 bouts of struggling for recognition on preliminary cards. This much was true.

A victory over Bethea, his manager, Mack Lewis, said would have meant a gateway to big fights and bigger pay days for a boxer who had never earned more than $300 for a night's work in the ring.

Funeral services Saturday

BUT TO at least two of his girlfriends, Monday was the night that Ernie would take down a big paycheck and march to the tune of wedding bells and turn a deaf ear to the fight gongs forever.

"Rainbow" didn't have a big payday — his share was a paltry $250.

At 1 p.m. Saturday, funeral services will be held for him.

The services will be held at Simmons Memorial Baptist Church, 601 Cumberland St. and burial will be in the Arbutus Memorial Park.

The Rev. William King, pastor, will officiate. Arrangements are being handled by the Morton and Dyett Funeral Home.

The family will receive friends in the main chapel, 801 N. Fremont Ave., from 8 to 10 p.m. tonight (Friday).

ERNIE'S ACTIVITIES — Monday — his last day of normal life on earth — was recalled by Miss Pearline McClumy of 603 Bentalou St. Under instructions from his manager to "take it easy" before his big night, Ernie slept late Monday.

It was 11 a.m. before he stirred, Miss McClumy said. As usual he was in a gay mood.

He was always happy and full of fun," the saddened young woman recalled.

"If I win tonight, I'm going on to the bigtime," she quoted Ernie as saying before sitting down to a late breakfast of bacon, eggs, toast, jelly and milk.

"If I lose and look bad, I'll hang up my gloves and forget it." Miss McClumy said he assured her before leaving for the 1 p.m. weigh-in at the Coliseum.

Investigation on

THE WEIGHING-IN ceremony, incidentally, has become a crucial factor in the investigation now under way by the Baltimore Grand Jury.

State Athletic Commission officials reported that Knox came in at 178 pounds and Bethea tipped the scales at 205.

These figures are under close scrutiny, however, since Dr. Charles S. Petty, state assistant medical examiner, revealed that the fighter weighed only 153 pounds when his body was brought to the morgue shortly after his death.

From this report it has been inferred that the more experienced Bethea possibly enjoyed a greater weight advantage than the assumed 27 pounds.

The investigation is continuing and William J. O'Donnell said late Thursday that

Rocks Thrown, Family Won't Move

IN BALTIMORE the Martin Hall family woke up to find white neighbors had welcomed it to block by tossing rocks through window. A daughter, Mrs. Lorraine White, shows result of resentment. They expect more trouble. The realtor from whom the family is renting the house in the tree-shaded 300 block of Lorraine Ave. is urging the family to stay. Mrs. White is fearful that harm may come to one of her three children. Police seldom make arrests in such cases.

Why whites stone homes

A current news magazine, in a story entitled "What the White Man Thinks of the Negro Revolt," sums up in sharp, clear language why colored families so often run into trouble when they move into neighborhoods where only whites have resided.

"He (the white man) doesn't want him living next door, and preferably not in the neighborhood," Newsweek magazine says after a national sampling by pollster Louis Harris.

The national magazine found: Whites, north and south, do not want colored living next door. A majority would support federal measures to provide 'good' colored housing. But most are opposed to any federal law that could enforce integrated housing."

Most white Americans, the magazine says, are for better housing for colored citizens "if he stays in his place."

RING VICTIM No. 2

Family unaware he fought

Death from boxing steered clear of Baltimore and Maryland since 1924, struck with two-fisted suddenness this week and snuffed out the lives of two young local fighters.

In addition to Ernie Knox, who was killed in the Coliseum ring Monday night, also dead is Cpl. Carroll J. Belt, 22-year-old marine.

He died of a brain hemorrhage Monday at the Camp Hue Army Hospital at Naha, Okinawa, where he has been on duty since May. Henry Belt, his father, was notified by Marine Corps officials.

Cpl. Belt sustained the fatal injury Friday night while boxing as a member of the Third Marine Division boxing team, officials reported.

* * *

MR. BELT said he didn't know his son was boxing and surmised he joined the team after going to Okinawa, where he has been stationed for five months.

His son was scheduled for discharge in March the father said, and has spent four years in the corps.

Cpl. Belt was born in Sparrows Point and attended Sollers Point and Dunbar High Schools, Mr. Belt said.

The marine, one of nine children, dropped out of school and volunteered for the Marines, Mr. Belt reported.

* * *

MARINE OFFICIALS first notified him by telegram Friday that his son was "seriously injured," the father said, and a second wire, telling of his death was received Tuesday.

Mr. Belt said he has been advised not to make any funeral arrangements because the body will not arrive here for another two weeks.

It will be escorted by a Marine Honor guard and
