—To face 3 murder charges

—THE MAN

By GEORGE W. COLLINS

more since 9:50 p.m. Friday when he hopped a bus to Cleveland, Ohio.

While a 13 - state dragnet was closing in on him, Wilkins surrendered Monday afternoon to Cleveland police and reportedly confessed to the murders which left in their wake a wave of shock and disbelief.

"I'm tired of running," Wilkins was quoted as telling Cleveland homicide detectives, and reportedly gave signed confessions, detailing the multiple murders.

Wilkins didn't object to being returned from Cleveland and Dets. Cadden and Zeller flew there Tuesday and brought him back by train, traveling all night Wednesday.

HANDCUFFED TO Det. Zeller, Wilkins was impassive when he stepped from the train and gave only a casual glance at AFRO Photographer I. Henry Phillips who fired away as the party ascended the escallator and left the station.

The former postal worker who was scheduled to return to work last Monday was arraigned in Central Municipal Homicide Court before Judge Mary Arabian and held without bail for action of the State's Attorney.

His family has obtained Atty. George L. Russell Jr. to represent him.

Deputy prosecutor Charles E. Moylan Jr. said the state will bypass a preliminary hearing and take the case directly to the grand jury.

Lt. Carl Dulin, chief of the Cleveland Homicide Squad, reported that Wilkins arrived in Cleveland 8 a.m. Saturday morning.

BEFORE SURRENDERING to police Monday Wilkins is quoted as saying he "stayed in the hotel, wandered around the city and attended the New York Giants - Cleveland Browns football game Sunday.

While the former Air Corpsman, Social Security, and postal clerk sits in City Jail awaiting his day in court, expressions of disbelief, bewilderment, shock and grief are echoing from relatives, neighbors and friends who keep mumbling "he seemed to be such a nice person."

"He seemed to be such a perfect husband and father," said one neighbor who lived next door to the Wilkinses for nearly two years.

"I'm convinced he loved his family dearly," she continued, pointing out:

"When one of the children sprained his ankle, he was in a state of shock. I had to take the child to the hospital."

ACCORDING to the neighbor, who said the walls separating the neat row houses on Seminole Ave. are like "tissue paper," said she has never heard the couple talk in loud voices in the two years she lived beside them.

"He acted as if he was deeply in love with his wife," said another next - door - neighbor. "If she became ill he dropped everything and tried to comfort her," it was reported.

Giving credence to the "quiet fellow" title the suspected murderer obviously wore comfortably, one informant recalled:

"When we held our usual over-the-fence conversations, I would have to stand right against the fence to hear him. He talked softly, acted quietly and impressed me as being a model fellow in every respect."

WILKINS, relative and postal officials reported, resigned from his post office job last December.

Relatives never knew why, but record at the post office show his reason was "moving toanother city."

With the exception of an unannounced and un-explained one-week trip to California, no one — relatives, friends, neighbors, or police — could find anything in Wilkins previous behavior that could be termed unusual.

"He has an ideal background, a clean-cut, intelligent chap with no record of any kind," said Lt. George Hansen, who also investigated the mysterious slayings.

"He doesn't have a driver's license. It's not often that people with such a background get involved in something like this," the officer said, shaking his head in bewilderment.

MR. CRAIG, obviously weighted down with the tragedy, told the AFRO Thursday:

"They got along fine as husband and wife. If anything had been wrong, my daughter would have told me. You see we are and always have been a closely - knit family," the bereaved father said.

"Why? why? ..... I wonder why? ....." he repeated as an emotion-filled voice trailed off into the spears of sunlight piercing the home of Mrs. Ethel Jason, another daughter.

Piecing togethers bits of evidence uncovered in the triple-murder, police theorized that Mrs. Craig was killed shortly after returning from the Catonsville Elementary School where she has taught the second grade for several years.

Mrs. Craig was fully clothed, investigators reported, and the orderliness of the house indicates there was no struggle, they believe.

Kevin, a healthy eight-year-older was a good swimmer, his grandfather said. "He couldn't have been drowned easily because he could swim too well," Mr. Craig recalled.

Strangulation and drowning were seen as evidence that Kevin put up a terrific struggle before being killed, it is believed.

Mr. Craig also said that two of his other grandsons were spared during the triple murder.

Sons of Howard and Mrs. Jason, the youngsters were being cared for by Mr. Wilkins while their mother was in the hospital and their father worked the night shift.

When Mrs. Wilkins returned from school, she would care for her nephews until bedtime and would carry them home a block away where they would sleep until Mr. Jason returned home, Mr. Craig said.

Mrs. Jason was still in the hospital Friday when the youngsters were given a pint of ice cream and sent home, the grandfather reported.

The older of the youngsters told police and relatives that the Wilkins children were alive when they left the house, around 6:30 p.m.

BOTH RELATIVES and neighbors reported calling the Wilkins home around 6 p.m. and being told Mr. Wilkins that his wife was out.

"She must have been dead then," said one informant, "but the children were alive. I asked him how was my baby (Kerwin) and he said 'he's fine, he can keep him; make'em noise, can't you?' and all," the family friend recalled.

Relatives on either side of the Wilkins home reported hearing nothing that would indicate that a triple murder was being committed in the quiet home.

"I heard no voices, noises, or anything," said one.

"I just can't believe it," said another. "It sounds so fantastic!"

That seems to be the general reaction to the triple - murder on Seminole Ave.

pened. I'll never know."

Mrs. Louise Craig, the mother and grandmother whose reddened eyes no longer shed tears, sat in deep silence as spears of sunlight stabbed through the window pane highlighting her shock of grey hair.

"She can't stand much more," Mr. Craig said, "we are both 63, and this has just about completely wrecked us."

Mrs. Jason and her husband Howard, whose children were at the Wilkins home shortly before sudden death went on a rampage, are virtually speechless.

Unable to comprehend the wholesale visitation of death they mostly pace the floor in silence.

Other relatives, young and old, sat in a shroud of silence broken only occasionally by a whispered exchange.

WHEN A reporter visited the house where the mother and sons reposed from 8 a.m. Thursday and until 8 a.m. today (Friday), visitors trickled in offering condolences and volunteering to "do anything I can to help."

Funeral services were held 10 a.m. today at the George G. Kelson Funeral Home, 1948 N. Calhoun St.

Father Henry Offer, rector, St. Peter Claver Catholic Church, officiated.

Burial will be in the National Cemetery.

Mr. Craig said final rites had been originally set to be held at the church, "but everything seems to ge going against us," Mr. Craig said.

When it was discovered that today is All Saints Day, as is every first Friday of the month for Catholics, services had to be moved to the funeral home.

The family will be buried in the National Cemetery because Mr. Wilkins as an Air Force veteran, has that privilege.

THE ACCUSED executioner of his own family personally gave his consent to the final resting place after being returned from Cleveland by Baltimore detectives. He arrived at 9:05 by train.

Reaction to the triple - slaying was as evident Thursday as it was when the gruesome discovery was made Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Wilkins' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Wilkins of 2300 Etting St., are also a study in stunned silence.

"Please, please, no statements, please," Mr. Wilkins said Thursday when a reporter visited their home.

"They are as hurt as we are," said Mr. Craig earlier while pointing to a wreath over the casket.

"Devoted in-laws," the tag said.

Other survivors include:

Charles Craig, brother; Mesdames Geneva Bennett and Juanita Bacoate, in addition to several nephews and nieces.

BURIED — The Wilkins brothers, Kevin, 8 and Kerwin, 2, found murdered in bathtub, buried Friday.

second . . .She was a good teacher."

THREE WEEKS ago, he recalled, his daughter was named to the board of trustees of the Baltimore County Teachers Association. (She was a graduate of Bowie State Teachers College.)

And of his accused son-in-law, Mr. Craig said quietly, "Wilkins was a fine, intelligent person . . . I don't know. . . ."

He added, almost in a whisper, that he held "no malice" in his heart for his in-laws. "They didn't do anything." (A floral piece from "in-laws" stood in the front of the room.)

AS WE TAKLED, friends and relatives entered to view the remains and to learn, that because today (Friday) is a Catholic Holy Day, the services will not be held at St. Peter Claver Church, but rather, at the George Kelson Funeral Home.

Some buried, sat in the dining room, kitchen and on the steps where there were more flowers.

In a corner of the dining room sat the grandmother.

"Yes," said Mrs. Craig, "it's a great shock . . .I don't understand it . . ."

Mr. and Mrs. Craig married at age 19. They will observe their 44th anniversary in April, 1964. They had eight children.

In his AFRO days, Mr. Craig, or 1936 in the AFRO composing room.

MRS. DORIS C. WILKINS

"Charlie," as we called him, remembered how he and Herman Malory, a circulation employee, were "running a race to see who would have the most children."

THE DEATH of the Wilkins family leaves the Craigs with three daughters, a son and 13 grandchildren.

"To our darlings," read the inscription on the casket of the grandchildren Nos. 14 and 15, and a devoted daughter who will speak no more.

Charles Craig, an old friend, came to the door as this writer left to say "thanks" for coming.

He was as courteous in grief as he was when he visited the AFRO composing room.

Methodist League play reaches climax Saturday

Play in the Methodist Athletic Association's football program will be concluded tomorrow (Saturday) when the Union Memorial Church Jets encounter the Metropolitan Mets at 11 a.m., at Carroll Park.

All other teams in the young league completed their campaigns last weekend, with the Govans Pirates and Maple Glen Tigers tied for first place with 3-1-1 records.

The Pirates and Tigers will meet in a playoff for the lead at 1 p.m. Saturday, at Bamneker Field in Catonsville.

• • • •

SHOULD THE Union Memorial eleven win its contest with Metropolitan, it will then engage the winner of the Govans-Maple Glen tilt in the Nov. 9, Bishop Love Youth Bowl game at Morgan College.

In the game last week, the Jets downed the Mt. Olivet Rams, 7-0.

• • • •

THE REV. Daniel Ridout, commissioner of the association, announced early this week that the Youth Bowl program will include a double-header in football.

Edmondson Crusaders will oppose the Southeast Police preceding the Methodist Boys Club eleven in the game League playoff.
