They Never Let Gallant 366th Forget They Were Black Soldiers

By MAX JOHNSON

"Tomorrow the children of the men of this proud regiment will stand here waging the battle for rights as an American citizen.

"There will be marches and demonstrations, sweat, blood and tears before victory is won.

"Our fight for rights as an American citizen has just begun, the men and their children of the 366th will see it to conclusion."

Col. Howard D. Queen (U.S.A. retired), former commander of the famed 366th Infantry Regiment, was speaking here Sunday during memorial services honoring the veterans of that now disbanded World War 2 combat outfit.

He was featured speaker at the services held at the Rev. O. St. Clair Franklin's Mt. Zion Methodist Church, Wabash and Liberty Heights Aves., and the banquet following at Winchester Armory.

Over 150 former officers and men of the 366th and their wives gathered here from points throughout the East for the reunion.

* * *

COL. QUEEN was overcome with emotion several times, as he recalled for the assembly the trials and injustices his regiment faced under his command from shortly after its activation at Fort Devens, Mass., in 1940 until it was broken up in Italy in 1945.

"The 366 was a proud regiment," he said at one point, his voice wavering in an unashamed sob. "Its officers and men faced many trying conditions because it was an all-colored unit, the first and only one of its kind to go overseas.

They bore up bravely, many sacrificed their lives, and all the while the sole intent of the high command was to create a situation where we would fail."

He told of how before shipment overseas he had to employ private cars to aid an ordered movement of the regiment to Camp Atterbury, Ind., a 600-mile trip, because sufficient army vehicles were not given him as he requested.

He spoke of how he was snubbed on the boat overseas and required to share quarters with his junior officers, though he out-ranked two white lieutenant colonels who were given staterooms.

Col. Queen recalled the landing in Casablanca, Africa, and said there were further indignities as the outfit moved some miles north to Oran.

"EVERYTHING WAS done there to harass the men," he said. "They would jail them on the slightest pretext, filing charges with me.

"I would take (major) George Lawrence, my S-2 (adjutant) right down and get them out. But I never charged the men. I knew the harassment they faced."

He said the area commander halted dancing in the Red Cross club there, rather than allow the 366th this entertainment.

However, it was when the 366th was assigned to join the 92nd Division in combat in Italy, he said, that it faced even worse resentment.

He recalled that the division commander, Major Gen. Edward M. Almond told the outfit:

"I didn't send for you. Your colored newspapers and some of your white friends want to see you in combat. Now it's up to you."

Col. Queen revealed he had asked for at least 15 days to get the 366th ready for front line duty, and was given five days instead.

Col. Queen moved to the front with his troops, but was then shunned aside by the division commander and later shipped back to a base hospital for physical check.

He was never returned to duty with his 366th.

Later on Dec. 26, 1944, elements of the outfit were criticised in some quarters following a breakthrough of German troops in the Serchio Valley, though they were known to be too thinly stretched over the area.

* * *

"FROM NOVEMBER, 1944, to March, 1945," he said, "the 366th suffered 30 percent casualties. Its officers and men won nine silver stars and 18 bronze stars for gallantry in action.

He recalled that two officers had sacrificed their

That $4.15 property tax rate proposed for next year — the 20-cent hike in the budget now before the City Council — prompts me repeatedly to musings on some diversified matters.

You are welcome to listen, if you will, to some of the louder ones — and, of course, those printable.

The musings are over the Council itself, proposed lotteries for tax relief — and, somehow, touch on the McKeldin-Rockefeller-Goldwater situation in Maryland.

Maybe if I go over some of the noisier ones here — maybe they'll quite pestering me for a spell.

* * *

TAKE THE City Council itself — a 21-member body.

It includes eight attorneys; three tavern owners; a real estate dealer; a liquor store operator; a steel company empolyee; an accountant; a charitable organization official; a construction company official; a business executive; a business school dean; a printer — and a cafeteria manager.

Eight of those 21 members are new faces just installed in office the past May — and thereby present difficult speculative subjects, in respect to the budget.

Yet — it's a safe bet this Council isn' going to let that proposed 20-cent property tax increase stand.

To do so would be to set what could be a dangerous precedent for future Councils.

* * *

THE CAN'T start something by publicly admitting councilmen are less than experts in trimming a city budget — and accept a tax hike proposed by the Board of Estimates.

So — they:s got to cut something.

Of course, no small prodder sitting right up there with the budget is that matter of getting elected again.

And that brings to mind some councilmen want to do something about halting the yearly property tax rise.

They want to have the state's Constitution amended to permit the city to stage lotteries — as a means of raising tax monies.

City Comptroller Hyman Pressman wants this done, too.

One General Assembly member has gone a step further — and proposes lotteries on a state-wide basis.

* * *

AND THE Sixth District's Senator Biff Hodges wants to legalize sweepstakes lotteries in the state — to aid its hospitals and educational institutions.

It would appear, then, there is a strong, rising insistence toward legalizing lotteries — to bring tax relief.

Yet — there remains perhaps stronger opposition.

Personally — I'm of the opinion people generally lose interest is a thing when you make it too easily accessible.

More folks want to drink beer during a prolonged shortage — than when there are kegs of the stuff on hand.

I once had a distant relative who kept a bottle on hand at all times during Prohibition — but became a teetotaler when they made the stuff legal again.

* * *

"THEY'VE TOOK the fun out of getting it," he used to say.

But for those who would foster legalizing lotteries — I have a simple solution.

That is — there is this solution to the problem of raising new tax funds through this new source almost akin to their proposals.

I say tax the backers of the city's existing lottery — the numbers game.

Don't know who the backers are, you councilmen say?

That's no problem — ask the Police Department.

SOMEHOW, THIS matter of the sure to rise property tax brings to mind Mayor McKeldin.

In his inaugural address — he all but promised a new city with new benefits.

If such is to be realized — taxpayers must bear the costs.

Property owners resent, however, bearing the burden of such costs — hence the current fuss.

Additional benefits are prone to make people forget quickly though — so the Republicans' Mayor McKeldin is in good shape.

He can sit back and take credit for the benefits — or blame lack of them on the Democratic City Council if it cuts the budget too harshly.

* * *

NOW THAT the mayor has jumped on New York's Gov. Rockefeller's presidential bandwagon — there arises the speculation of how much weight this will carry in the city and state.

For there is strong sentiment here for Arizona's Senator Goldwater, an ultra conservative — as compared to the liberal Rockefeller.

I would strongly suspect — having long noted some elements in operation at Annapolis against human rights legislation — a lot of Democrats will switch to Republican just to vote for Goldwater in the primary.

Senator Goldwater has become known as a man against almost everything.

He is against medi-care, foreign aid, added social security for the aged, to name just a few — and he wants no part of civil rights legislation.

Goldwater backers are attracted because they find something in his "aig'in it" program to identify themselves with — because they are against that something, too.

Why else?

Jail student in assault

"This is the most violent act I think I've heard of in a public school. Sounds like something out of a movie."

This is how Judge John McQuire on Wednesday termed the Nov. 4 assault on a principal and two teachers at the Cherry Hill Junior High School.

Judge McQuire then sentenced Charles R. Howard, 19, an 11th grade student at the Carrollton School, to three years in the Maryland House of Correction.

The youth, of the 2800 block Spelman Rd., was charged with assaulting James R. Hite, the Cherry Hill School principal, when he was asked to leave the building.

He was further charged with assaulting two teachers, George Yorkman and Orenzo Staggers, who came to the assistance of Mr. Hite.

* * *

HOWARD, represented by Stanley Paul, pleaded not guilty to the assaults and a charge of disorderly conduct in Southern Municipal Court. In his testimony, Mr. Yorkman stated, "Without a hint of violence (pointing to Howard) this boy hit Mr. Hite with such speed and force that I was absolutely amazed.

"Only a few seconds before he was completely calm. I cannot imagine why he did it."

Prior to Mr. Yorkman's testimony, Mr. Hite stated that he had observed the youth walking through the hall.

"I asked him if he would please leave the school and he answered, 'Are you going to put me out?' I told him no, and started to go to my office to call the police.

"Just as I started to turn this boy hit me in my mouth."

* * *

MR. HITE, as a result of the unexpected blow, had to be treated at University Hospital. He said the youth knocked out a tooth and two other teeth had to be extracted.

Mr. Staggers, who attempted to subdue the youth, received medical treatment for a cut on his lower lip.

He said that he had not been in the hall when the youth attacked Mr. Hite, but was attracted by the noise of the scuffle in the hall while teaching a class.

After striking Mr. Staggers the youth ran from the building, testimony revealed. He was arrested the following

Store near police station burglarized

A self-service food market, at the corner of Mount and Mosher Sts., about 150 yards from the Western District Police Station was burglarized last week. Bandits escaped with more than $1,000 in cash and merchandise.

The store owner, Paul Diamond, of the 3100 block Manet Rd., said when he entered his store Wednesday morning he discovered his safe missing. It was later found empty in a neighboring back yard.

Police said that burglars had apparently gained entrance by forcing open a window on the Mosher St. side of the store.

Suspects are being questioned about the burglary.

Housing, heating hazards increase

WASHINGTON

With the coming of winter, the toll of deaths and accidents due to carbon monoxide poisoning show a marked increase.

This gas is odorless, colorless, tasteless, has a cumulative effect on the system, and is extremely deadly. Its presence can only be detected by the use of proper testing equipment.

J. Harvey Joyce, veteran postal employee, became today (Friday) the highest ranking member of his race in the local post office.

During ceremonies in the office of Postmaster William F. Laukaitis Mr. Joyce was sworn in as assistant superintendent of the Parcel Post Station with a Grade 11 rating.

As assistant superintendent, Mr. Joyce will be second in command of the station which handles 100,000 pieces of incoming and outgoing parcel posts daily.

The new superintendent lives at 2218 Sequoia Ave., and has worked in the postal service since 1939.

* * *

MR. JOYCE is a graduate of Douglass High School and attended Morgan State and Cheyney Teachers College.

Before being upped two grades he was general foreman of mails at the main office and had a G-9 rank.

Mr. Joyce has been a supervisor since 1950 when he was promoted to foreman. The new position pays $8 to $10 thousand annually.

Highest ratings previously earned by colored employees include three superintendents of branch stations.

James J. Somerville, 2210 Presbury St., was promoted to foreman of carriers at the main office.

Move to run Massachusetts' Ed. Brooke for governor

Edward W. Brooke, Republican attorney general of Massachusetts and first of his race to win election to such office in this country, was a visitor here Saturday.

He came for a reunion with former officers and men of his old 366th Infantry Regiment, a now disbanded combat outfit which conducted itself with high honor in Italy during World War II.

With the handsome, youthful-looking Mr. Brooke came three interesting revelations.

1. A move is under way to run him for governor in Massachusetts' next election.

2. In making his successful bid for attorney general he turned down an offer to be lieutenant governor.

3. Had it not been for his service as an officer with the 366th, he might not have entered the profession of law and carved this niche in the nation's history.

* * *

THESE MATTERS came casually during a gathering Saturday evening with Col. Howard D. Queen, former commander of the 366th and Mr. Brooke at the home of Tom Thomas, 3100 block Piedmont Ave.

In the group were Alfred Brothers, member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, and clarence R. Elam, also of the 366th who had played a major role in the attorney general's successful campaign.

Messrs. Brothers and Elam, in paying tribute to Mr. Brooke, told the group his popularity and political strength had grown so much there was serious consideration of running him for governor.

We sincerely believe right now," said Mr. Brothers, "he can win it. He's got a tremendous amount of support."

Mr. Brooke accepted this graciously and said with a broad grin:

"There's nothing I wouldn't do for those two fellows (Brothers and Elam), but right now I'm busy being attorney general."

He then recounted some events leading to his victory, stating he had polled such an encouragigg vote in an earlier unsuccessful bid for secretary of state, he had decided to try for attorney general.

It was during the course of this campaign against two wealthy formidable opponents that he said the offer came for the lieutenant governor post.

"I guess they thought I ought to have seen a psychiatrist," Mr. Brooke said. "There was I, a colored lawyer, turning down a bid

Tues. deadline to change party

Tuesday is the deadline for those who may wish to change party affiliation from Democrat to Republican, or Republican to Democrat, before the primary election next May.

This also applies to those registered as independents, who may desire to choose a party.

The Supervisors of Elections office, ground floor, Fayette and Gay Sts., will be open today (Friday) until 4 p.m., and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday and Tuesday.

After the coming Tuesday, citizens must vote either Republican or Democrat in the May primary, in accordance with their registration.

Those registered as independents, not affiliated with either party, cannot vote in the primary, but must wait until next year's November general election.

This means the independents may not express a choice for any presidential candidates, senators or congressmen in the primary.

BURHA endorses open occupancy bill

Richard L. Steiner, director, Baltimore Urban Renewal and Housing Agency, has advised the City Council he favors passage of the open housing provisions contained in Mayor Theodore R. McKeldin's omnibus civil rights ordinance.

He said his agency had studied also the open occupancy ordinance proposed to support the administration's proposals because they "are simpler and clearer."

In a letter to Thomas D'Alesandro 3rd., president, and City Council members, Mr. Steiner stated, in part:

"This agency's position has been one of non-discrimination in housing under its jurisdiction, and we would favor the extension of this policy and practice outside of urban renewal and housing projects.

"This agency's policies in connection with housing are all aimed at creating equal opportunity for housing for all groups.

"Our public housing program is already operating in accordance with the principles that these ordinances seek to establish."

* * *

THEN IN the strongest stand BURHA has taken to date on open occupancy in housing, Mr. Steiner wrote:

"This agency believes that segregation in housing is a cause of residential overcrowding and that it aggravates slums and conditions of blight and deterioration.

"Beyond these physical effects, such segregation demoralizing to the groups which are discriminated against, discouraging those ambitions and aspirations upon which the community must depend, if such groups are to take a more positive role in community life.

"Baltimore cannot expect equal responsibility, without affording equal opportunity."

KENNEDY DEAD

LYNDON JOHNSON IS NEW PRESIDENT

President lay motionless after ambush shooting

DALLAS, Texas — President John F. Kennedy was assassinated from ambush today as he rode in an open car through the business district of Dallas.

The President was shot in the head as three shots rang out from a crowd estimated at more than 250,000.

He was rushed to a hospital with his head lying in the lap of his wife, Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy.

Texas Gov. John Connally was also seriously wounded in the assassination attempt.

The President was riding in an open car motorcade when shot.

Secret Service agents ordered the car carrying the President to speed up and go directly to a hospital.

President Kennedy lay motionless on the back seat of the car during the trip.

He was carried the the emergency room of the hospital with Mrs. Kennedy by his side.

At 2:10 P.M., police arrested a 25-year-old suspect in connection with the shootings.

Found in a downtown office were four spent shells.

Last reports indicate a Secret Service agent was fatally wounded.

There were early conflicting reports on the condition of President Kennedy and Gov. Connally.

Gov. Connally was taken to an operating room immediately after their arrival at the hospital.

A secret service agent was overheard to say that services in the emergency room were sufficient to take care of the President.

The shots apparently came from a fifth floor office building.

At 2:07 p.m. Baltimore time, the President and Gov. Connally were both reported still alive though seriously injured. The President recieved a blood transfusion.

Those close enough to the White House limousine in which the President was riding heard the First Lady cry out, "Oh No."

Those close enough to the White House Limousine in which the President was riding heard the First Lady cry out, "Oh No."

This was the first time since the election that Mrs. Kennedy had been on the political trail with her husband and had seemed to be enjoying it.

At 2 p.m. it was announced that a chest surgeon had been called to the hospital but was not known if he was to see the President or Gov. Connally. Two priests were at the President's side.

There also was a question of whether President Kennedy was shot in the head or the chest.

The President's mother was notified early of the assissination but his father, who has been seriously ill, had not been notified at a late hour.

THE ARREST CAME LATER police had surrounded a five-story building in downtown Dallas and apprehended the suspect. He was being questioned behind closed doors.

President Kennedy's trip to Dallas was earlier termed by aides as "non-political" but in reality the slain Chief Executive was in Texas to mend political fences. He was to make a speech at the Dallas Trade Mart and was on his way there when shot.

Mr. Kennedy had won Texas in the 1960 election by only 46,233 votes out of 2,311,845 cast in that state.

In Dallas Mr. Kennedy was to have defended his space program policies. The day before in San Antonio at the dedication of a new building at the government's Aerospace Medical Center where he had urged continued all-out effort in the space race.

LYNDON JOHNSON

Texan follows JFK's policies

Lyndon Baines Johnson, 55-year-old Vice President of the United States, unofficially became president at 2:25 p.m. Eastern Standard Time today (Friday), the exact moment that President John Fitzgerald Kennedy died of a high powered bullet wound of the head.

President Kennedy died less than an hour after he was shot in the right temple by an unknown assassin while riding in a Presidential motorcade enroute to the Trade Mart in Dallas, Texas, home state of Mr. Johnson.

Mr. Johnson becomes President after serving a little more than three years as second in command to President Kennedy.

* * *

THE NEW PRESIDENT native of the Lone Star State, has been credited with during much to advance the cause of freedom for all Americans.

Mr. Johnson assumes the reins of leadership of America only a few weeks after rumors were circulated that he would be dropped from the Presidential ticket in the 1964 election.

The former vice president was head of the President's Commission of Equal Employment Opportunity.

He made an all-out effort to become President in the 1960 election.

PRESIDENT'S WIFE Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy

JFK made key appointments

The late President's Civil Rights proposals submitted to Congress gave the Attorney General authority to file suits integrating the schools, guaranteed equal public accommodations, fair employment and voting rights.

The measure would have refused Federal funds to any program or activity where racial discrimination is practiced.

President Kennedy set an all time record by appointing colored ambassadors to Denmark and Finland.

He named the first three colored persons, James Parsons, Chicago, Wade McCree, Detroit; Oliver Hill, Washington, to U.S. District Judgeships and first colored postmaster of a big city, Los Angeles.

* * *

U.S. DISTRICT Attorneys were appointed for the first time in Cincinnati, Ohio and San Francisco. The first U.S. Marshal of the District of Columbia since Frederick Douglass, and the first colored Commissioner, John Duncan, of the District of Columbia, were named by Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. Kennedy created enemies by insisting on passage of a bill setting up medical care for the poor and aged under Social Security.

In every department of the Federal employment, Mr. Kennedy insisted on the employment and promotion of colored workers.

Agents of the Federal government policed Social Security, the Post Office, Coast Guard and Veterans Administration to see that the presidential executive order on fair employment orders were carried out.

* * *

THE LATE President was the first to name a colored person to head the Housing and Home Finance Agency and then seek to raise him to cabinet rank.

An executive order on equal opportunities in housing financed by the Federal government was issued November 20, 1962.

PRESIDENT KENNEDY

Travelled safely round the world

President Kennedy spoke openly before 100,000 Germans in Berlin within sight of the Russian Iron Curtain and no attempt was made on his life.

He had to return to his own country in the southern state of Texas to die by an assassin's bullet. He also had travelled safely to England, Austria, Italy, France and South America.

Also shot in the shoulder was Governor Connally of Texas. A secret service man was killed.

A President is dead

By J. D. WILLIAMS

A President is dead.

Long live the President.

There were tears in the eyes of girls coming from the Western High School.

An old man wiped at his eyes as he stood near a car and heard the news of the death of John Fitzgerald Kennedy.

A hush seemed to settle over the city, as dusk fell, the mist that hung over Baltimore on this dreadful Friday.

How could they believe what they heard?

How can a man be alive one moment and the leader of the most powerful nation on the face of the earth, and the next moment, a cheap bullet crashes into his head and ends a magnificent life?

The President is dead, long live the President, but how can you still the pain that darkened the faces of the people who stood in the street and tried to understand what had happened?

Everywhere you looked, it was the same. The same sad faces, the same tears.

A President was dead and a nation was in shock.

It was as if a member of the family had died.

And he had.

Adlai mobbed in Dallas

Dallas, Texas is home of Major General Edwin M. Walker, retired, who was arrested, indicted and then released at Oxford, Miss during riots there. The General was charged with implication in the movement to resist entrance of Meredith to the University of Mississippi.

Dallas was the scene last month of a disturbance in which U.N. Ambassador Adlai Stevenson had pickets spit in his face and strike him in the head with picket posters.

FDR attacked

It was in another Southern city, Miami, Fla., that another President, Franklin Roosevelt, February 13, 1933, was fired on by an assassin and Mayor Anton Cermak of Chicago with him was killed.

An attempt was made on the life of then President Harry Truman by Puerto Ricans, November 1, 1950, while he was living in Blair House in Washington.

JFK a first

President Kennedy at 46 was the first chief executive to use federal marshals or troops in Southern states four times.

In Montgomery, Ala., he sent 300 federal marshals to protect freedom marchers from rioters in July, 1963.

In September, 1962 he used marshals and troops to force admission of James Meredith into the University of Mississippi over the objection and members of White Citizens' resistance of thousands of Councils.

Nationalized state guardsmen were used in Tuscaloosa, Ala., in June, 1963 to move Governor Wallace out of the door t compel admission of two colored students into the University of Alabama.

In Birmingham, Ala. September, 1963, federalized National Guardsmen were used under Kennedy's orders to compel integration of public schools.
