—Police hunt

lock her door," he said.

"I could see a red light shining through the opening. I called her name several times, but there was no response.

"Then I knocked. The door swung open and I walked in a few steps. There she was, lying on the floor below her sofa-bed," he said.

Mr. Bryant, a public school art teacher, recalled that for a few seconds he was unable to move.

"I thought she had become ill and had fainted, but after I regained control of myself, I went to where she was laying, bent over her and that was when I noticed the pink scarf."

He attempted to loosen the scarf from the girl's neck.

"But it was too tightly tied. So I ran to my apartment and returned with a pair of scissors and cut the scarf, then tried to revive her," he said.

His attempts failed and he called the police and the victim's mother, Mrs. Tommie Louise Winfrey, 1000 block W. Lanvale St.

FOUND AT the murder scene by police were a claw hammer, a table knife, and a towel and sheet with blood stains on them.

All were taken to the crime laboratory but have failed to supply police with a clue.

Two notes were also found in the apartment. One was to a telephone installation man, telling him where to put a new telephone, and the other read:

"Joyce - I was by again (incidentally your door was open) I came by to take you out."

The author of the note was a 41-year-old man questioned by police but was also released.

Married to Callis N. Brown, now a resident of Durham, N. C., Mrs. Brown had been seperated from him since May, 1962.

Their son, was kept by Mrs. Brown, but was cared for by a baby-sitter during the week.

As an aspiring actress Mrs. Brown, starred in the Arena Players' production of "Come Back Little Sheba," and "The Little Hut". She had been associated with the group since early spring.

Mrs. Brown, according to Mrs. Willie Jo Eure, an aunt, attended elementary school in Lynch, Ky., and went with her family at an early age to Statesville, N. C.

She was graduated in 1960 as valedictorian from Unless High School in Statesville. Following her graduation she attended North Carolina State College and Hampton Institute in Virginia.

While a freshmen at North Carolina State she was among the first to be arrested in both Durham and Statesville for participating in racial protest and sit-in demonstrations.

She had worked for the mail order house for several months.

Funeral arrangements at AFRO presstime were still incomplete.

A member of Ames Méthodist Church, Mt. Winans, Mrs. Brown played the organ for Sunday services and was a member of the choir.

Considered "...an ideal tenant," Mrs. Brown was well-liked in her neighborhood.

Mrs. E. B. Anderson, who lives on the first floor of the adjoining house, remembered Mrs. Brown as being a very quiet young woman.

She also stated that on the night of the murder between 9 an 10 p.m., her dog started barking and looked toward the back of of the house.

Mrs. Anderson said she got out of bed and looked into her back yard but didn't see anything and returned to her bed.

Of lesser import but still pretty fancy are dog galoshes (four to a set, one for each paw) rhinestone dog collars, from $3.95 to $20.00 and a real Christmas Eve special, dog stockings to hang over the mantelpiece. They are stuffed with rubber toys, dog biscuits and other delicacies.

These are gifts for the well-bred canine. Whether they bring any real joy to pooches is hard to say but it is definite that buying any or all of these products brings real joy to the guys who run pet shops.

Next week we'll let you in on gifts for cats.

Seeds of decay must be routed-Mishoe

Morgan State College used its Ninety - seventh Founders' Day observance recently to pay final respects to President Kennedy and heard an educator challenge education to rout from the American society the "seeds of decay" that made possible the assassination of the country's leader.

Morgan State College President, Dr. Martin D. Jenkins, led the solemn tribute.

The challenge to education was sounded by Dr. Luna I. Mishoe, president of Delaware State College, who said that higher education "must assume a new dimension of responsibility to dispel the seeds of decay in our society."

HE SAID:

"I warn you, the seeds of decay are present in our society . . . whenever the President of the United States . . . is cut down in his own country at the hands of an assassin while attendin to matters of State; whenever the alleged assassin is himself murdered in the arms of the law without due process of law; whenever tension mounts so highly among any group of people in our so highly among any group hold the constitution of country and to obey the orders and edicts of the Supreme Court of these United States;

"Whenever citizens in our democracy are denied the right of full participation in our government including the fundamental right to vote; whenever any individual in our society, no matter who he is, is denied equal opportunity to use whatever talent he possesses to earn for himself and his family a livelihood consistent with his ability; whenever a free citizen walking peacefully along a public highway is murdered, whatever the alleged reason;

"Whenever a group of people, peacefully assembled in the Act of Divine Worship, must suffer death by outrageous bombing or any other disturbance or violation of the constitutional right to peaceful assembly; whenever a citizen is subject to external harassment, economic reprisal, threats of death, and death itself, simply because he purchased a house in a certain neighborhood; whenever we allow anyone to spit in the face of our distinguished senior statesmen, ambassadors or other public servants for doing their jobs as they see it."

DR. MISHOE said the situation is not hopeless, however, and he urged that government and education unite in a concerted effort to provide the leadership needed to combat the decadence that is present.

He said that education must do more than it has done in the past to "advance a system of human values."
