Mitchell brands filibuster 'Jungle law' advises cure

WASHINGTON

The filibuster can be beaten.

Anticipating House passage of the Administration's civil rights program, this was what Clarence Mitchell, director of the NAACP's Washington Bureau, told delegates to the Women's International League for Peace.

"Put the filibuster on the filibuster on the level where it belongs, with the law of the jungle. Let the filibusters wear themselves out," the NAACP official advised.

MR. MITCHELL appeared on the same program, Monday night, with Mrs. Gloria Richardson, Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee official of Cambridge, Md.

Mrs. Richardson called the Maryland town "a rampart of racial segregation in all its monstrous forms."

There is no need to belabor the point, she said. Cambridge represents on a small scale what the entire Western World represents globally for non-white peoples.

"We (the non-whites of the world) live in one homogenous ghetto, economically, socially, educationally and politically."

REPRESENTATIVES from states and the District of Columbia attended the dinner meeting, held at the Bellevue Hotel, which was highlighted by short speeches of the two leaders.

Three student representatives, Hattie Harrell and Betty Hughes and Ann Anthony, from Tuskegee Institute, Ala. were also present.

MR. MITCHELL assured his listeners of the civil rights bill's passage because, for the first time in many the country has become aroused to the need of legislation to combat base injuries.

TO THE question, "Can we get the Bill out of the Senate?" Mr. Mitchell answered, "The Congress can do anything its leaders want it to do."

He urged members of the convention to find time while in he city to attend the sessions of Congress and observe the "beautiful blows of hypocrisy in action.

we had to prove several things.

First, that the move toward freedom could be accomplished through various techniques of non-violence.

Secondly, thatthose in the forefront of the fight would not stop or ease their demands on the intransigent power structure of the white community."

Mrs. Richardson stated that in Cambridge the impetus of the movement initially came from the high school students with only limited encouragement from the parents.

NOW IT has become evident that the elders have had to become an active part in order to back up the students. Parents had to be made aware that it was not necessary to have a college degree to fight for rights. Non-violence became a community affair, she said.

Finally she cautioned: "For those of us who are growing older it is only from the youth of this country that this movement will survive and grow on the necessary national scale.

"They are the ones that have the vast courage, dogged determination in the face of many kinds of death, the spontaneity and creativity of non-violence - and the years to mortgage.

"IF YOU are no longer able to think and act as radically as they do, then do not try to lead but follow. "Give your support and trust in their mistakes and their victories, for this is possibly the only salvation for the generations to come that will have to live in America."

To a question regarding continued protests, Mrs. Richardson said that there will be more protests, but refused to divulge the date on which they will begin.

THE TUSKEGEE students participated in the forum by answering questions regarding the part they, their school and the communities in which they live are playing in the non-violent movement. They gave in skit-form their version of racial problems in the South.

The Women's league, one of the oldest women's peace organization was started in 1915 during WWI, with Jane Addams as its first president.

Throughout its history it has maintained its purpose: to work for the achievement by peaceful means of those political, economical, social and psychological conditions throughout the world which can assure peace and freedom.

mom, by having affairs before she is out of junior high school.

"And the hypocrisy seems much worse to such a girl if her mother compounds the lie by interrupting the casual love weekends with a visit to church on Sunday. Any sensitive adolescent is going to be awfully confused by an adult who can go from love to church.

"An adult would say the mother, having no husband or being a widow, has a right to her own life. Teen-agers are puritans actually. And idealistic. All they can see is that mom is a fake."

THE PARENTS themselves, often find themselves engaged in conversations such as this:

"Kids aren't like they used to be. In my day, we minded our parents. My 16-year-old boy thinks he is a man and all he wants to do is to run the streets at all hours of the night.

"If I say anything to him, I get a smart remark."

"I know what you mean," said the second person.

Both are neighbors. Both are parents of teen-agers. Both are caught up in a situation becoming increasingly important to all parents.

"I can't talk to my boy anymore," continued the first speaker. "My wife and I work hard, everyday, to send him to school and buy him clothes. And for what? Nothing! I just don't understand."

Ultimate blame must be placed somewhere for juvenile delinquency and youthful criminals. That blame must be placed upon parents.

Abstractions such as society, community, the times and the environment, too, must share some of the blame.

But the bulk of the blame must be borne by parents because the human personality, if given the right direction, can overcome adverse conditions.

During a survey of community leaders, of persons attitude, motivation, values and morality.

The inadequate parent sabotages his own efforts to raise emotionally healthy children if he is querulous, refuses to respect his children's dignity, does not understand that it is important to have a reason for discipline and to be consistent.

Inadequate parents may unwittingly instill in their children a false sense of values, low self-esteem and poor habits.

"MANY PARENTS are not emotionally geared to understanding their child," said Mrs. Marion Banfield, 3700 Springdale Ave., physician's wife and a mother of teen-age children.

"Many children are reared by screaming, overly-controlling parents who do not know how to react to their children," she said.

Mrs. Banfield, attributed the parents' emotional stance to their own childhood.

"The parents themselves," said Mrs. Banfield, "probably had very poor relationships with their parents."

In such situations, Mrs. Banfield said, the community must be aware and "must face the fact that some parents cannot provide stable emotional climates in the home.

"The community must also face the fact that some parents do not and cannot love their children.

The inability to love is a serious problem because it may be unconscious.

WHAT OF the parent who loves, yet does not know what to do?

Police Captain William Armstrong, of the Pine Street Station for women and juveniles, said that some parents must be taught "what to expect of a child."

He stated that a major problem is that parents simply do not know what to do nor how to cope with their children.

He believes that in some near future time, parents will have to attend school and neighborhood guidance classes and parent education classes in elementary school.

Del. Dixon quits

position in the General Assembly in Annapolis is now strengthened thusly, as a result of Mrs. Dixon's move:

Senator Verda F. Welcome heads a group of club members which includes Mr. Abramson, who in turn is head of the Baltimore House delegation; Mrs. Dixon, and Delegate Clarence M. Mitchell 3rd.

THE POLLACK House forces includes these first term delegates — Ernest D. Young, lone member of his race in the group, Joseph Abramson (no kin to the above Mr. Abramson) and Pollack faction members Harvey A. Epstein.

Just two years ago, the held five of the Fourth District's House seats.

At that time, this faction held four of the then six House seats of the Fifth District.

Now the Fifth District has an allotment of seven House seats, none of which is held by a Pollack man.

All have deserted that faction. Among them are Marvin Mandel, speaker of the House, Alexander Stark, Sol I. Friedman, who had been organization as a full-fledged member."

Lloyal Randolph, president of the Fourth District Organization, commented:

"Mrs. Dixon is a very fine lady, well - liked, highly capable and a real asset to any organization. We are fortunate she is joining us.

"She will help us to do many things for the people of the Fourth District."

Mr. Randolph's own leaving of the Pollack forces two years ago to join with the then young Fourth District Democratic Organization, is credited with doing much toward Mrs. Welcome's victory over a Pollack faction senator.

MR. ABRAMSON, who has been a close friend of Mrs. Dixon for several years, praised her as a "very capable legislator," in expressing pleasure over her move.

Mrs. Dixon is the wife of the late William B. Dixon, who had been a long - time Pollack ally.

She entered politics and the House of Delegates race in 1959, winning a seat under the Pollack banner.

She won again on the Pollack ticket in 1961.

A native Baltimorean, she is a Morgan College graduate; a former teacher in the public schools, a member of the NAACP, the executive board of the Urban League, Advisory Board, Department of Public Welfare, and a life member of the National Council of Women.
