son of Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Prout, 1640 Carroll St. He became a second lieutenant in the Marines and will be stationed at the Marine Basic School in Quantico.

After this tour is completed he will apply for further training in San Diego, Calif.

James E. McDonald Jr. of Kingston, N.Y. will also be stationed at the Basic School in Quantico. He is the son of James E. McDonald, 77 Gage St.

The 25 - year - old second lieutenant attended Kingston High School.

SPEAKING AT the colorful ceremonies in the Academy Fieldhouse, Chairman Vinson said seapower would continue vital to national security and that the time has come for congress to modernize the Navy.

He stated that all - out nuclear war was "unthinkable" because of mass destruction on both sides. But lesser wars will continue, he warned, and the Navy must stand ready to fight them.

He also warned against unilateral moves to disarm: "Until the objective of universal peace is fully attained we must stand ready to win any kind of war that may be forced upon us.

"There is no doubt that our nuclear submarine force will continue to play a critical role through the proven reliability of its strategic missile capability. Indeed, all the navy must convert to nuclear power as quickly as this becomes militarily advantageous."

EXHORTING THE midshipmen to a life of service, Vinson quoted from President Kennedy's speech to the 1961 Class — "The life of service is a constant test of your will."

"Master that test," Vinson said, "and yours is certain to be rewarding life.

Many of Vinson's fifty years in the House of Representatives have been spent in support of the Navy. He has never cared for formal speeches, but agreed to make the Academy's graduation address at the urging of President Johnson, himself an old Navy man.

The ceremonies Wednesday included all the old traditions.

After its commissioning the class hurled its collective 925 hats into air amid the popping of flashbulbs and glare of TV cameras.

In his remarks before introducing the speaker, Rear Admiral Charles S. Minter Jr., superintendent of the Academy, wished the graduates a "fair wind and a following sea."

Secretary of the Navy Paul H. Nitze presented the diplomas to the class. Nearly 190 members, who graduated with distinction, received their diplomas personally. The rest received theirs by companies.

General Wallace M. Greene Jr., commandant of the Marine Corps, administered the oath of office to the 73 midshipmen becoming Marine officers.

Admiral David L. McDonald, chief of naval operations, commissioned the ensigns for the Navy.
