Interracial unit seeks Pen probe

"We see a real need now for fair employment legislation, open occupancy in housing and public accommodations laws in the state to conform with the national civil rights act."

Parren J. Mitchell, executive secretary, Maryland Commission on Interracial Problems and Relations, was speaking Thursday, outlining legislative proposals of his agency.

Mr. Mitchell said the commisson has agreed to push for legislation in these three areas when the state's General Assembly convenes at Annapolis in January.

The commission is prepared, he said, to either support bills on these matters presented by lawmaker on their own initiative, or have the agency's own measures introduced.

"THERE MUST be no more piecemeal legislation in these areas," Mr. Mitchell stated. "Particularly, segregation in housing which is the whole key to the segregation picture, as for one instance that in schools."

In other business, the commission took steps to counteract the growth of White Citizen Councils in the counties, by encouraging its Human Relations Committees in those areas to increase their activities.

These Councils, Mr. Mitchell pointed out, are gaining strong membership in Charles, Montgomery, Prince George's and Anne Arundel Counties.

The commission also deplored the hate literature prominent during the past campaign centered around Question 5, the public accommodations referendum.

To offset this and similar propaganda in the future, the agency will set up counter literature and activities of its own in this area.
