Pool case is heard

Baltimore's Community Relations Commission is faced with its first test case of determining whether a specific club's facilities and membership are actually operated on a public or private basis.

The case at point involves the Meadowbrook Club at Falls Rd. and Kelly Ave., whose management is accused by a Jewish woman of refusing her membership solely on basis of her race.

The charge by Mrs. Leon Levin, 200 South Rd., was aired publicly before the commission at its Wednesday monthly meeting.

Mrs. Levin told the commission her application for membership at the white club, made the past June, was never acted on, and she is convinced this is because of her Jewish race.

H. WARREN BUCKLER JR., commission chairman, said at conclusion of the hearing a number of questions would be directed to the club's management in respect to its structure and operational procedures.

This investigation is expected to be well under way for some report at the commission's next monthly meeting.

"It is clear that Meadowbrook discriminates," Samuel T. Daniels, CRC executive secretary, stated. The sole issue is weather it qualifies as a bona fide private club."
